How Can I!!!

By Anne Ashby

Q. How can I clean and polish silverware without using polish?
A. Boil a handful of rhubarb in a quart of water, put the silver in with it for five minutes, then rinse it in clear hot water and wipe the silver dry.

Q. How can I eliminate food odors from my refrigerator?
A. By putting a few drops of oil of wintergreen in a back corner. Or, keep a small chunk of charcoal in the refrigerator. It's best, though, to keep the charcoal in a little cardboard box or baking powder tin with holes punched in it, so the charcoal can't be mixed with any of the food.

Q. How can I easily remove a stubborn cap from my nail polish bottle?
A. Try running hot water over the cap for a few minutes.

Q. How can I keep my car from rusting?
A. Wash the car frequently with soap and water, and wax it regularly. Keep the car in a garage or under a cover when possible.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

And now our week of days has almost all passed from us, gone we think like a pleasant dream. One which led us at these farms of ours along only delightful trails. The gold of the harvest was spread on either hand and the music for our excursions was supplied in remembered refrains by cricket and locust choirs. Blue skies provided our canopy and we recall now the great white galleons of cloud which with September sails and bearing many a wish drifted lazily along the summit of our tree-crowned hills.

One morning, with all work of barn-building suspended, we welcomed the arrival of the binder, and if we found in our heart some longing to see it drawn by three horses as of old, it nevertheless followed cheerfully in the path of a tractor. At the time, Rob's vacationing team eyed its approach along the lane idly, heads over the confining rails of their pasture while in a field at Alderlea, four of their kind continued their care-free days. This harvest as last, Mr. A., neighbour to these places, drives the tractor, Rob the binder, while it falls to the lot of Jarvis and the younger farmer with sometimes a helper to lift sheaves and fashion them into weather-worthy stooks.

"Do you know what I saw today, Ellen?" a visitor to The Island and this farm asked the other day with some amusement in his voice, "A man using a fork to build his stooks! And it surely looked funny to me. It looked as if in this machine age, folks were getting too... yes, lazy, to do it by hand."

"That's a western fashion," James explained, "and I've seen some mighty good stooking done that way — and fast."

"But I guess, Dear," the visitor's wife, a gentle little lady, turned to her husband, "you've forgotten by this, just how to make a stook."

"Forgotten!" chuckled the son of an Island farm. Stooking he caught up an imaginary sheaf, rolled it a moment beneath an arm while he gathered its mate and then with that motion which to a farmer is so natural as to be involuntary, he set his sheaves in precise position on the "stubble."

"There!" he laughed to her, "don't say that I've forgotten how to stook grain! Why I've earned medals for that in my day on the farm!"

This week ours knew the intangible rewards of satisfying hours when the weather was pleased to favour their harvesting. And none not even James, who has seen much farming and who "never yet missed taking part in the harvest" could not lift the mist from the farmhands nor stay the showers in the hovering clouds those days which suspended this field work.

And through the golden light of the season, above and roundabout the Master of the harvest, the Same Who once upon a time, on a day such as this has been—all blue and gold, walked through the corn fields of old. And now stars twinkle in the night-blue and the shadows of twilight dim the farm-lands.

The day is done and the darkness falls from the wings of Night. As a feather is wafted downward from an eagle in his flight...

And the night shall be filled with music, And the cares, that infest the day Shall fold their tents like the Arabs, And as silently steal away."

Until Monday — — — Diary — — — Good-night.

Mysterious Phone Call

It Leads To Wife Improving Her Appearance, Pleasing Husband

DEAR MISS DIX: Last week I received a very disturbing phone call. A man who identified himself as a mutual friend said he had seen my husband with another woman. When questioned about it, my husband told him I had become too matter-of-fact in my attitude towards our marriage. A few hours later I called the friend back for more information, and he denied ever having called me, saying he had been home all day with his family, which fact was later verified.

However, the call did lead to my making an analysis of my husband and me. I am absolutely convinced that my husband isn't seeing anyone else but I do acknowledge the truth of my attitude. In five years I have gained 25 pounds, use make-up only when I go out, have let my hair become streaky, and do forget that my husband might like some affection. Now, should I tell him of the phone call or try to forget it?

AGNES R. SELF-IMPROVEMENT COMMENDED

ANSWER: Your caller certainly was a helping hand in disguise, and it honestly seems as if that's just what he was trying to do. Husbands and wives often need to be jolted into a better appreciation of each other, that is apparently what your anonymous friend accomplished in your case. Don't tell your husband of the call, but do continue with your ideas of self-improvement. You say that your husband has been tremendously pleased by the small things you've accomplished in one short week, so keep them up. Your increased attention to him, your efforts to improve your appearance, your evinced desire to spend more time with him—all have made an impression. Surely you cannot doubt the fidelity of a husband who is so obviously thrilled with your aim to please.

Look upon the mysterious phone call as the blessing that may have averted serious trouble in your household.

DEAR MISS DIX: About a month ago I met a boy who is engaged to a girl in a hospital. He says he doesn't love her any more, but won't tell her until she's well. In the meantime, he wants me to go out with him. I don't think I should go with a boy who is engaged, do you?

LAURA S. ANSWER: Not only should you not go with an engaged man, Laura, but the man's actions toward his fiancée are not entirely honorable. While it is true that love can change, and an engagement is not binding until death, a man who falls out of love with a girl because she has had a long illness could scarcely be depended upon by anyone in any emergency. Such love is apt to be of the fair-weather variety, and not quite up to facing the vicissitudes of life.

Miss Nissen cannot reply personally to readers but will answer problems of interest through this column.

The Stars Say --

For Tomorrow SUNDAY'S horoscope holds augury of great social activity with functions, both festive and sentimental, engaging the attention. It is not a day in which to inaugurate new ventures. It is a good period in which to give further consideration to plans postponed during the recent period of inactivity, with a view toward putting them into effect during the propitious time beginning with the new week.

Domestic affairs, romance and courtship are favored. It is an excellent period for developing cultural interests, relaxing hobbies and other leisure occupations.

For the Birthday If tomorrow is your birthday, you should find the year ahead one in which uncertain or lagging affairs suddenly take a lively turn for the better. Conservative measures are urged until the end of 1953. With the beginning of the new year, the cooperation of influential persons is assured.

Home and family matters move into focus within the next few months. You may be called upon to give help to parents, brothers or sisters. Be generous in this respect, for you will be more than amply rewarded. Travel is possible during the early spring.

A child born on this day will be studious and idealistic but inclined toward impatience with the shortcomings of others.

SLOW BUT SURE GLENBORO, Man., (CP)—"Better late than never" is the motto of a cow owned by George Wayne. Bessy gave birth to a little heifer calf. A full week later, a second calf was born, without any ill-effects.

RAPID CURE OF RHEUMATIC FEVER ATTACKS

It is known that rheumatic fever is childhood's greatest enemy; it is also known that rheumatic fever is the commonest cause of heart disease in children; it is also known that no attack of rheumatic fever does not give immunity and the patient may have several attacks, each attack usually doing some damage to the heart.

In the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. B. B. Brees, University of Rochester (N. Y.) School of Medicine and Dentistry, reports a five-year study of various plans of treatment used to control the streptococcal organisms which cause rheumatic fever.

In this five-year period, 792 children between the ages of 2 months and 18 years with 1,204 proved streptococcal infections were observed by Dr. Brees and his associate Dr. F. A. Danzey. The distribution of cases was equal between the two sexes but the "first" attacks showed a pronounced tendency to occur in children of ages 5, 6, and 7 years. Forty-eight per cent of the infections occurred in children of this age group (5, 6 and 7); 25 per cent occurred in children under 5, and 27 per cent in children over 7. Less than 2 per cent were observed in infants under 2 years of age. April and May were the months with highest number of attacks.

The treatment of these cases in homes of patients or in the physician's office consisted of the use of the sulfa drugs, use of aureomycin and penicillin. The symptoms were treated by acetyl salicylic acid (aspirin) or gargles.

"The great majority of patients were treated with penicillin in various dose schedules, given by mouth or injections. Within 24 hours of treatment by aureomycin and penicillin, the temperature had subsided, the patient felt, and acted better, and, in some cases, "waxed" to resume full activity." It is not surprising that these are called wonder drugs.

Because of the effectiveness of these drugs, Dr. Brees and Danzey advise home care, if possible, as a single dose of 600,000 units of penicillin into the muscles will give effective blood levels for as long as two weeks. In some cases the penicillin is given by mouth.

"The advice was directed toward (1) immediate relief of symptoms with the use of an antihistamine drug; (2) removal or avoidance of offending allergens, wherever possible, specific penicillin (all year round) desensitization in graded schedules depending on individual sensitivity.

During the period June, 1948—August, 1950, 654 employees were examined and tested. Of these 344 remained under active desensitization through the fall of 1950. In October, 1950, each employee undergoing injections received a questionnaire asking him to record his opinion regarding the results of each individual antigen used in his treatment.

In order to analyze failures, a special study was made of the experience when ragweed was used (commonest cause of hay fever). It was found that failures occurred in persons with long established disease. On the other hand, this study showed that a yearly schedule faithfully followed over a long period of time results in greater improvement during the pollen season.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Leo

Q. When a guest, invited to dinner, finds that it will be impossible for him to arrive at the appointed hour, what is the best thing for him to do?

A. Telephone his host or hostess immediately, explain, and request that they do not wait for him.

Q. Is it necessary that the gowns worn by the bridesmaids at a wedding be identical?

A. Not at all. But the colors must harmonize and the styles should be somewhat alike. The bridesmaids and the bride-elect should get together many weeks before the wedding, so that they will have ample time to plan their attire.

Q. When a girl goes to a party with a young man who is a stranger to all the other guests, how should she introduce him?

A. It is only necessary that she introduce him to the hostess, who will, if she knows her duty, introduce him to the other guests.
