Display By Handicrafts Council

TREMENDOUS PROGRESS has been made in the development of handicrafts in this province and this weekend—it's on Friday and Saturday to be exact—the members of the handicrafts council is staging a two-day display here of some of the best and most interesting examples of their skill.

I believe, but it's new and interesting. That's how it comes to be in the island. If it's good for the island, it's good for the world. The site, I am told, is the Confederation Centre. This building complex has quickly taken over an important part in our community life. Its usefulness is increasing.

And that reminds me that the last trip I made to Western Prince I saw some attractively made book ends that "are different." They are so attractive that we took along a pair for the Matheson home at Southport.

They are made by Carl Profitit who runs a service station on the Western Road just west of Alma. It is at a cross road and the reason I'm plugging this man's product is that he is pluckily trying to add to the income he gets from his service station. I'm told the site is usually referred to as Profitit's corner.

Mr. Profitit was horribly injured sometime ago when he was crushed by the end of a building that fell on him. His spine was injured badly, I believe. And the unfortunate accident left him with a circulation problem that has robbed him of the use of his legs, and feet, for one thing. The result is recurring outbreaks of sores that must be most discouraging.

Guns To Protect Against U.S.A.

CHARLES MACDONALD, 99—he lives now in Lower Montague—told me a story of how a visiting American General noted on a visit many years ago the guns at Victoria Park. When he asked "What are these guns for?" the quick-witted James MacDonald, father of Charles, replied with a twinkle in his eye "to protect us from the United States of America."

The Yankee general laughed heartily and insisted that Mr. MacDonald accompany him for the rest of the day's tour of points of interest in Charlottetown.

Voice Heard-Mother Far Away

HAROLD L. SMITH, Rochford Street told me an unusual story. Probably more than 60 years ago Mr. Smith was sitting at the table reading the Bible, with two older brothers and a sister in their home at North Rustico. Their mother and father were some two to three miles away at the time, but they distinctly heard their mother's voice, say the word "children", as though in a mildly reproving tone, saying that they were runners of a death, or some other event. But the unusual part of this story is that nothing happened later to indicate anything of this character. And Mr. Smith told me, his mother lived to be 90 years of age or more.

The children went to the door at the time and looked outside, so real was the sound of their mother's voice.

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Laird Smith, were visiting at the time at the home of W. Chester S. McLure's people. Chester will be remembered as a Member of Parliament for Queens in his later years, previously he had been a member of the Provincial Legislature. His home here in Charlottetown was on the site of the present Birchwood High School.

James Laird Smith operated a retail business at North Rustico. Mr. Smith died while he was still young, and the business was carried on by Wesley Paynter who married Mrs. Smith.

Cultural Exchange With France Possible By Canadian Provinces

OTTAWA (CP)—An agreement opening the way for Canadian provinces to set up individual educational and cultural exchanges with France was signed here Wednesday.

The document signed by External Affairs Minister Martin and Francois Leduc, French ambassador to Canada, also sets out desires of the two countries for greater co-operation and exchanges in the cultural, scientific, technical and artistic fields.

It also seemed likely to pour some oil on a slightly stormy area of federal-provincial relations.

Letters signed by the two officials as part of the pact spelled out the conditions for any "entente" or agreement:

"Within the framework of the said agreement exchanges with France in the field of education and of cultural, scientific, technical and artistic relations may be the subject of ententes entered into with the provinces of Canada. In such a case the French government will inform the Canadian government."

"The authority for the provinces to enter into such ententes will stem either from the fact that they have indicated that they are proceeding under the cultural agreement and the ex-

The new agreement opens a wide area for the provinces to negotiate individual pacts with approval of the federal government contingent only on notification.

The agreement is for five years and would be renewed automatically unless one of the countries gives six months notice before the expiration date.

Mr. Leduc said he hopes provinces other than Quebec will take steps under it to foster closer relations with France and help spread the French language.

Teachers and students, artists and scientists, television and radio programs and films and publications are covered in the exchanges.

OBITUARY

Inserted by the family
NELSON MacLEOD
There passed peacefully away at 186 Penrose Street, Charlottetown, on Oct. 7th, 1965, Nelson MacLeod in his 80th year.

Although he had not been in good health for the past few years, his death came suddenly and unexpectedly and was a great shock to his family and friends.

Born in Long River, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon MacLeod, he lived almost his entire life there, and by his kind manner, and friendly disposition endeared himself to all who knew him, he will be sadly missed by friends and neighbors.

He leaves to mourn his wife, the former Bessie Dunning, and daughter Jennie, Mrs. Elwood Campbell of Summerside, and one son, Grant of Charlottetown, and two daughters, Mrs. William Johnston, Ralph Johnston, Andrew Johnston, Ernest Dunning, D.A. Campbell and Bruce Bell.

Interment was in the Geddie Memorial Cemetery.

STRAWBERRY PLANTS Under Refrigeration

By NEIL A. MATHERSON
Provincial-Farm Editor

THE GROUND was frozen and the snow was falling miserly this week when I visited the farm of Parker Jewell, York to see him preparing strawberry plants for shipping next spring to growers in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

If you wonder am I trying to be funny? The answer is "no." Mr. Jewell had 100,000 of the plants pulled when I called on him Tuesday afternoon. He was going to pull at least another 100,000, possibly more, if the weather didn't close down on him for the winter. He has space for 300,000 plants in all.

The plants are taken from the ground with a special mechanical arrangement that is hauled by a tractor. They are shaken apart, piled into a truck and taken to a building where a group of people give each plant individual attention and pull off extra leaves, then the plants are grouped in bundles of 25, placed in a plastic bag and put into refrigerated storage for the winter. They are kept in a walk-in cooler at 28 to 30 degrees above freezing.

MR. JEWELL has been doing this for several years now, he told me, though this is the first time I have heard about it. He's the only Islander who is handling the plants in this way.

Plants like these have more vitality when they are planted next spring. Normally plants taken from the ground in the spring have started to grow leaves, etc. and it is a shock, a setback to them when they are pulled and put into refrigerated storage.

The Jewell plants are dormant when they are pulled. They remain dormant in the cool storage and have all of their vitality when they are planted next year. That's the principle, I am told and it does make sense to those who know plants.

The plants have to be left in the ground in the fall until they are dormant. This means at least two frosts that go down to about 25 degrees, Parker tells me.

"We are the co-operating nursery for the Experimental Farm," Mr. Jewell told me. The strawberry plants are grown on "The Farm" for one year. Then they are grown on the Jewell farm for one year—"we propagate them", he explains. Then they are sold to farmers who grow them commercially.

They grow five varieties at York. The Sparkle and Redcoat are the most popular. There are also the Cavalier, Catkill and Acadia varieties—the latter is a new variety.

It is not a large strawberry farm as berries go. There are some three and one-half acres of the berries in all. (See picture page 8).

Action Urged

On New Coastal Fishing Limits

OTTAWA (CP)—The Fisheries Council of C.A.S.A. and a handful of fishermen called on the federal government to take quick action to put new coastal fishing limits into effect to guard the country's fishing resources for Canadians.

The council told External Affairs Minister Martin and Fisheries Minister Robichaud it is concerned at the increase in foreign vessels off the east coast and the entry of the Bahamas into the groundfish fishery in Queen Charlotte Sound on the west coast.

It urged the government to move as quickly as possible to establish new base lines on a headland-to-headland basis so areas such as Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait, Queen Charlotte Sound, the Bay of Fundy, the Strait of Belle Isle and the Gulf of St. Lawrence will be enclosed as national waters.

Twenty-two of the council's directors, representing all major fishing areas, were at the meeting.

In a statement, the council said the ministers replied that the government is aware of the seriousness of the situation and is moving as quickly as possible to deal with the problem.

In 1964, Parliament approved legislation to establish a 12-mile exclusive fishing zone but international negotiations with countries which have fished in these areas for a long time have delayed its implementation.
