REPORT ON THE LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY:
"We have visited the bottling stores of Greenlees Brothers, and have selected from the vats, samples of their Lorne Highland Whisky, and have subjected them to careful examination and analysis. The samples were very fragrant, mellow, and of pleasant flavor, and possessed all the characteristics of pure and well-matured Scotch Whisky of the first quality."

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

SEPTEMBER 11, 1880.

The necessity of accuracy in business has been shown by a recent transaction. The despatches say that "a man named Sutherland, of Nova Scotia, had a commercial transaction with Mr. S. W. Beard, of Montreal, and offered for discount in the Merchants' Bank of Halifax a draft on Mr.
Beard for $281. The Bank telegraphed to Mr. Beard to know whether he would accept this draft at sixty days. Mr. Beard replying "yes, at four months." The draft was discounted for $281.25. But when it was sent up for acceptance it was refused.
It was protested for non-acceptance and at maturity for non-payment. The bank sued Mr. Beard for damages for refusal to accept according to promise. Mr. Beard contended that he never promised to accept a draft for $281.25, but for $281. His Hon.
Mr. Justice Torrance maintained this pleading and dismissed the action."

An United States correspondent says that in the distribution of the Geneva Award the great obstacle of Congressional action in the past had been the persistent claims of the Insurance Companies to the balance of the Award. These claims were finally rejected by the last Congress, on the ground that they (the Insurance Companies) were not actual losers, and that they were paid, when shown to be actual losers, under the law of 1874. The remainder will now be distributed, as a part of it has already been, to those citizens upon whom loss now rests.
In this class there are those who lost by the cruisers, not included in the law of 1874, and those who lost by the payment of heavy war premiums to these Insurance Companies. Bills favorable to the above class of claimants have passed the House time and again, but have failed to pass the Senate. At the last session the Senate refused to pass a Bill favorable to the Insurance Companies, and, by a majority of one, laid the matter over till the next session.

GRIT newspapers, such as the Patriot, will, of course, on reading the "Worcester's" passenger list, blaze with brilliant articles on "the exodus." They will reasonably forget that the majority of those who sailed per "Worcester" are young men and women, who, during the reign of McKenzie and Cartwright, made homes in the United States, and are returning, after a brief visit to their native Province.
They will not consider that one of the grandest celebrations in the annals of Boston takes place on the 14th inst., and that a goodly number of the "Worcester's" passengers go to be present at the festivities. Neither will they take into consideration that September is the pleasantest month for the Maritime tourist to visit the States, and that not a few of the passengers were gentlemen on their September tour. All these facts will be overlooked.
A volley of abuse will be aimed at the N. P. and its promoters. Ruination, and Desertion of the Country, will be the cry; and we suppose these articles will wind up with the prophetic statement that the Maritime Provinces will soon be depopulated.

The correspondent of the Journal at the Braz writes:—"As two of our young men were coming from preaching on Sabbath evening, and having a piece of road to go over, through a thick woods, on emerging from a thicket they imagined they saw what they supposed to be a bear in pursuit. They walked along slowly, and seeing the object gaining on them, they went off to the side of the road, and procuring weapons, they awaited the arrival of the bear, which was not long, and had the pleasure of seeing it go past. Quick as thought one of the young men proposed to take off their boots and noiselessly pursue the object. They followed it for some distance and at last it vanished from their sight and was seen no more. Since the young men have had the adventure there has been a great many conjectures formed about the unknown object."

ENEAS R. MACDONALD, Esq., Laird of Morar, Invernesshire, Scotland, and his son, Mr. Ronald T. Macdonald, were here during the past week on a visit to their relatives, the Messrs. Macdonald & Bros. of Georgetown and Montague. During their stay here they appeared in their Highland dress, a novel and pleasing sight to the many Highlanders who reside here. They are on their way to visit Western Canada and the great North West.—

John Bright.

DEFIANCE HIS FORTE, AND SCORNFULNESS HIS FAILING.

We have always held that Mr. Gladstone—let his friends and enemies say what they will—has more of true conservatism about him than any other great man of our time. Every cause he fights for, he fights for because he sees that but for it some great inheritance of the past might be lost or squandered. Mr. Bright, too, is not without a dash of the genuinely English conservative, but the potent traditions of his faith, and of the political causes with which he has necessarily had the most sympathy, have thrown his powerful imagination into moulds of a totally different cast. Like Byron—to whom, so far as politics can suggest analogies to mere literature, Mr. Bright has a certain amount of intellectual affinity—he always seems to say, "I am of the opposition." Even in power, he speaks like a great leader of opposition. He does not much affect the attitude of constitutional authority, of responsible and solicitous counsel. Defiance is his forte, and scornfulness is his failing.

Indeed, oddly enough, Mr. Bright's mind always strikes us as of the aristocratic order. The indifference with which he has always ignored the people when he has offended their feelings, has in it a great deal of Byron. "Aristocracy," says Byron's most recent biographer, "is the individual asserting a vital distinction between itself and the muck of the world." In that sense of aristocracy Mr. Bright is a great aristocrat. Like Byron, too, he always rebels "against the associative tendency of the nineteenth century. You can never realize Mr. Bright even as the member of a Cabinet. When he rises to speak, the Cabinet disappears, and that strong single figure rears itself alone before your mind."

Mr. Bright is often great in counsel, but he is much greater in defiance. He cannot merge himself in any class or any committee. Sometimes he scoffs even at the middle class, with whose interests he certainly has most sympathy, though he has none with the hesitating manner in which they take their cue from the great. Often he dares the aristocracy to resist justice.
Now and then he pours his scorn on what he thinks the unreasonable prepossessions of the working class. But, like Milton's Satan, if he speaks at all, he is always great and always in opposition. He cannot speak to show the advantages of what he admires. He is only kindled by the meanness, or the pettiness, or the insolence of what he opposes. You never remember that he is in possession of authority, that he is in power—all his great personal power being of the nature of capacity for onslaught or resistance.—London Spectator.

The Farmer.—A Beautiful Picture.

The man who stands upon his own soil, who feels that by the laws of the land in which he lives—by the laws of civilized nations—he is the rightful and exclusive owner of the land which he tills, is by the constitution of our nature under a wholesome influence not easily imbibed from any other source. He feels—other things being equal, more strongly than another the character of a man as the lord of the inanimate world. Of this great and wonderful sphere, which, fashioned by the hand of God, and upheld by his power, is rolling through the heavens, a portion is his. It is the space on which the generation before him moved in its round of duties; and he feels himself connected by a visible link with those who preceded him, as he is also to those who will follow him, and to whom he is to remit a home.
Perhaps his farm has come down to him from his fathers. They have gone to their last home; but he can trace the footsteps over the scenes of his daily labors. The roof which sheltered him was reared by those to whom he owes his being. Some interesting domestic tradition is connected with every inclosure. The favorite fruit tree was planted by his father's hand. He sporting in his boyhood beside the brook which still winds through the meadow.
Through that field lies the path to the village school of earlier days. He still hears from his widow the voice of the Sabbath bell which called his fathers and his forefathers to the house of God, and near at hand is the spot where his parents were laid by their children. These are feelings of the owners of the soil. Words cannot paint them—gold cannot buy them; they flow out of the deepest fountains of the heart; they are the life-spring of a fresh, healthy and generous national character.

News received from Upton, Quebec, convey terribly sad tidings of ravages of bush fires in that neighborhood; 20 houses at St. Helen, county of Bagot, have been burned; around Drummondville, numerous farmers' dwellings have been destroyed.
At St. Charlotte Range the settlement is in ashes. At St. Valran, Shefford County, a saw mill and five houses have fallen a prey to the flames. Nine persons are missing, supposed to have perished in the flames. The fires around Valcour have caused damage to the extent of $40,000.
The victims of the flames are Telephore and Joseph Courier, whose bodies are burned to a crisp, while one person at least of those badly burned will not recover.
Food and clothing will have to be forwarded at once. The fires seem to be subsiding, but until the burnt district can be explored the full extent of damage cannot be ascertained.
