

First Tourist Of Season At Alberton Is From B.C.

The first tourist to visit Alberton this season is Mr. Gilbert Arthur of New Westminster, B.C. Although Mr. Arthur was born here he has no memories of this Province, for at the age of two or three years he went with his parents to Western Canada and this is his first return visit.

His parents were Melville Arthur of Alberton and the former Luc Ann Hodgson of Tryon. Mr. and Mrs. Melville Arthur went west and settled in Kenastano, Sask., where the former's brother, Dr. George Arthur, was serving as a medical missionary. A few years later Mr. and Mrs. Arthur and their two children, Fulton and Catherine, returned to Alberton and lived at the old homestead in the Dock. It was here their third child was born and he was given their grandfather's name, Gilbert. The family went west again and continued to live in Kenastano for a number of years. Later they moved to the coast. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur have both passed away. In addition to the children already named they had two more daughters, Jean (now Mrs. McNab), and Eva.

Mr. Gilbert Arthur is a psychiatric nurse in Essendale Hospital where approximately five thousand patients are under treatment. This son of "The Island" in the east is married to a daughter of Vancouver Island in the west. It has been humorously pointed out that they met on the strip of mainland that lies between these two very important islands. They have two daughters. The older by a student nurse; the younger one, who is still in high school, intends to follow her mother's profession of teaching.

While in Alberton Mr. Arthur is the guest of his cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Arthur. Since arriving here last Thursday evening he has had opportunity to make the acquaintance of many relatives and friends of his family. During this week he will leave for his home, taking with him many pleasant thoughts and impressions of this beautiful Province and its friendly people.

Moon Rocket To Be Balanced By Tricky Super Broomstick

WASHINGTON (AP)—A tricky "broomstick" balancing system will be built into the rocket that launches the first baby-moon satellite into outer space, it was disclosed Tuesday night.

Engineer Peter Freeman of the Glenn L. Martin Co. of Baltimore, navy-appointed prime contractor for the satellite launching vehicle, disclosed the plans in a talk prepared for the Washington section of the Institute of Radio Engineers. Freeman described in some detail the prospective control mechanism for the unusual finless rocket that will jettison the satellite into a globe-encircling path. The elliptical course that will vary from 200 to perhaps 1,500 miles above the earth's surface.

The huge, 72-foot three-stage rocket will be controlled in its upward flight, he said, by an electronic and mechanical system.

He explained that the rocket—bearing the satellite in its nose—will be kept from wobbling, swerving or rolling end-over-end in much the same way that a youngster keeps a broomstick upended in his hand by moving his hand from side to side or forward and back.

In the case of the rocket vehicle, Freeman said, the trick will be accomplished in this way: Gyroscopes will be used within the rocket as reference guides to an accurate path. But, if the rocket shows a tendency to get off the beam, various control gadgets will take over.

These gadgets will be tied in with the rocket's propelling motors which will be arranged on semi-pivots. The pivots will allow the motors to automatically tilt and provide directional changes in the stream of exhaust gases surging from the vehicle's stern.

It will be these changes in the direction of thrust that will keep the vehicle from pitching like a boat, yawing from side to side, or tilting end-over-end.
