Not Much Sign Canada To Reduce Defence Spending

By DAVE McINTOSH
 Canadian Press Staff Writer
 OTTAWA (CP)—The government's hesitancy over whether to order production of the super-sonic Arrow interceptor doesn't augur a cut in defence spending next year.
 Even if the government decides to scrap the Arrow program next March, there is no assurance that there will be a major reduction in the defence budget below the current fiscal year's $1,686,000,000.
 The size of the defence budget has an important bearing on spending by non-military departments in government because expenditures on defence account for about 30 per cent of all federal spending. The higher the defence budget, the less funds available for non-military outlays without deficit financing.
 If the Arrow had been ordered into full production at its original estimated cost — $9,000,000 each without missile armament — the defence budget in the 1959-60 fiscal year starting next April 1 would have been much greater than $1,686,000,000.
 However, the government has no intention of buying the plane at such a high per-unit cost and urgent investigations are in progress on how to reduce the price.
 Also, the government will order only limited production—say, 100 planes or fewer—if it does decide to buy the aircraft.
 Consequently, on the assumption that the government will presently chase some Arrows, the defence budget next year would be of the same order as the present one or a little higher.
 At the same time, the government will have to put down first instalments on new radar stations, electronic computers for air defence, Bomarc anti-aircraft missile sites, six new destroyers, missiles and possibly other new equipment for the army.
 From this it can be seen that with or without the Arrow defence outlays are going to continue to be high.
 Estimates of government spending usually are presented to the Commons in January. It is possible the 1959-60 estimates will be delayed beyond this coming January until the government makes up its mind what to do about the Arrow. It is known that the estimates of the defence department are still far from ready for presentation to the Commons.

 rooms must be staffed by teachers who will realize their duty to our Canadian way of life. Teachers will transmit the heritage and traditions of our pioneer civilization, to our youth and they in turn will form habits, ideas that will determine the course of our national and world future. We also owe a duty to our new generation of citizens to impart these and other great Canadian truths.
 "It's a truism that a good teacher can so inspire a child, the whole course of the child's life is changed. It's also a truism that a bad teacher can infect his or her pupils with a hatred of learning, can stifle their imagination, and give them such faulty habits of work, that they will never have a chance of gaining ever material success.
 "We would regard it as unthinkable to permit a man to practise medicine unless he was qualified to do so, but no such scruple prevents us from letting untrained people into the teaching profession...
 "We need teachers of intellectual and spiritual stature who will go beyond the mere imparting of facts to interpretations and conclusions of real human import, teach children to use their heads, control their emotions, and imaginations, and fit themselves for the battle of life...
 "Only the most vital and capable of men and women are able to do this task well. The fact that one is financially independent and secure will do much to bolster that self confidence that is so necessary to a good teacher...
 "At the present time there are many able young men and

Californian Motorist Meets 'Monster' On Road At Night

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — A funny thing happened to Charlie Wetzel on the way home Saturday night. A monster jumped out at him. That's what he told authorities who planned to continue an investigation of the incredible story, Sunday.
 Wetzel, 24, reported soberly that he was driving on a street near Riverside when a frightening creature jumped in front of his car.
 "It had a round, scarecrowish head," he said, "like something out of Hallowe'en."
 "It wasn't human. It had a longer arm than anything I'd ever seen. When it saw me in the car it reached all the way back to the windshield and began clawing at me."
 "It didn't have any ears. The face was all round. The eyes were shining like something fluorescent and it had a protuberant mouth. It was scaly, like leaves."
 Wetzel said he became terrified when the creature reached

 The brick-walled apartment block stood on a cliff on dead-end St. Mathieu Street just off Dorchester Boulevard, overlooking a string of CPR railway tracks about 30 feet below.
 The building is in downtown Montreal, just nine blocks west of Dominion Square and the CPR's Windsor Station.
 As more than 125 firemen tried to keep the flames from spreading during a pre-dawn drizzle, the scene looked like a nightmare from Dante's inferno.
 Hundreds of feet of fire hose snaked under and over itself in the rain-drenched courtyard while pyromaniacs clad in shiny black jackets and helmets searched for the cause of the fire.
 Some of the cars were lifted bodily. Others were towed away while firemen smashed windows of others to release brakes.
 As tons of water were poured on the building, the roof collapsed into the fourth floor.
 Shortly after all the upper stories collapsed in a shower of sparks and flying embers into the first floor.
 Streams of water under great pressure were shot at the swaying walls.
 The brickwork on the upper stories caved in and most of the rest of the building went with it. Only a smouldering, debris-filled shell remained.

WAITS FOR HUSBAND

In a corridor of a nearby building, Mrs. Daphne Smith, 29, a Jamaican, sat with a friend waiting for news of the fate of her husband, who had been lured down to the third floor by the sounds of calypso music.
 "My husband, Kenneth, heard the music and went to see what was happening. I was asleep and I haven't seen him since."
 She said she wrapped her 11-month-old daughter in a robe and made her way to a fire escape.
 "Someone helped me down. I don't know who."
 A New York syndicate recently purchased the Oldfield Apartments and sent Sidney Appel to Montreal as manager.
 "I haven't been here long enough to know the place," said Mr. Appel as he tried to compile a list of names of residents for the police.

SEEK INFORMATION

CHIPMAN, N. B. — (CP) — The body of Jonathan Lewis Beers, 54, of Chipman was found Sunday on a highway four miles from here. RCMP have asked for co-operation from motorists and residents of the area for information that may shed light on Beers' death.
 Col. Maurice Forget, president of the Quebec Natural Gas Corporation which supplied the building with gas, said his company plans to conduct its own investigation. He said he had been told by fire department authorities there were no explosions, "unearthly screams."
 One survivor, Marcelina Krzymowski, a plump Polish woman who came to Canada almost a year ago from Britain, told a reporter that she and her roommate Amber Kravtchik, escaped after hearing "unearthly screams."
 "There was an explosion as we got out," she said. "We had to run for our lives."
 Window screens and venetian blinds were flung 50 feet into the courtyard by what appeared to be a blast of some sort.
 Other people who managed to get out of the burning building said they were too stunned to recall precisely what happened.

U.S.-Russia Split Openly At Bomb Talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Russia split openly Sunday over the aim of talks opening Monday in an effort to guard all nations against the peril of a nuclear surprise attack.
 The state department, in a note made public here Saturday, told the Russian, the Geneva talks must be limited to work on technical military problems involved in eliminating the surprise element.
 The Soviets, in a note a week ago, had spoken about definite moves in the field of disarmament — which was read here as meaning insistence on immediate agreement on a disarmament inspection zone in eastern Europe.

DISAGREE ON RED AIMS

State Secretary Dulles told a press conference Friday he was not discouraged about disarmament. But his subordinates in the state department are divided over whether the Western powers are really getting anywhere in their talks with the Russians. Some experts are convinced that whatever their long range aim, the Soviets' immediate motive probably is to weaken Western forces rather than to move toward disarmament.
 Others contend that the dangers of a nuclear war are so great that the leaders in Moscow must seek at least limited disarmament measures in good faith and for their own protection.
 In the talks on suspending nuclear tests, which opened at Geneva a week ago, Soviet negotiators have been insisting on a permanent ban on such testing. They have set that out as a condition to stopping their own test explosions and negotiating an inspection system to enforce the ban.
 Most authorities here seem to believe that in following this strategy the Russians are trying to get an end to testing without paying the price of inspection. The Western powers have always maintained that inspection is essential in view of Russia's vast areas and police state secrecy.
 Inspection is the major issue in the problem of denying in every nuclear power the opportunity to try to take over the world with a massive surprise blow aimed at destroying all opposition within a few hours.
 In Saturday's note the United States told Moscow in effect that until technical questions are resolved, the Western powers are not going to become involved in the same old familiar political disputes.
