A-Bomb Anniversary Ends 12 Years Of Atomic Age

By ALTON L. BLAKESLEE
Associated Press Staff Writer
Soft dawn light stole over Alamogordo, tinting mountains sleeping unchanged for hundreds of years.

Then in sudden shocking fire and fury the mountains trembled, blazed under the brightest light seen on earth.

In that instant, man's future changed irrevocably.

For this was the dawn of the atomic age, 12 years ago today on the New Mexico desert. Man had set off his first atomic explosion. In that instant was born the new age of atomic power for war or peace.

THEN CAME DESTRUCTION
Three weeks later more than 78,000 men, women and children died under the atom at Hiroshima. Three more days, and 39,000 perished at Nagasaki. Quickly, the bloodiest war in human history ended.

Today, this brief dozen years later, West and East stand armed with atomic weapons which could obliterate the world's cities and peoples.

Statesmen seek a path to disarmament. Ordinary folk hope these weapons can mean an end to war.

Today's A-bombs and H-bombs are so vastly superior to that first Alamogordo explosion.

Radioactive fallout, the poisonous dust from bomb tests, worries and puzzles millions of housewives and scientists, butchers and diplomats. Is fallout dooming unborn generations, is it shortening or damaging our own lives? Nations seek an end to tests, all started with that secret explosion 12 years ago.

These are worrisome fruits from the power of the atom.

WORKS FOR PEACE TOO
But the atom also is being controlled to supply electricity and power to build civilization and make life easier. Several dozen peacetime atomic power stations are being built or already operating around the world. The atom is coming to the rescue of nations—like Britain—already hungry for lack of coal and oil.

The atom is giving us new and better products. It has saved industry millions of dollars. Radioactive atoms are measuring engine wear, inspecting welds and castings, doing dozens of new jobs.

Rays from radioactive atoms are combating cancer and other diseases. They are helping farmers, devising more efficient fertilizers, promising more disease-resistant plants.

HAD MONOPOLY
For four years after Alamogordo, the U.S. enjoyed an atomic bomb monopoly.

Russia rudely shocked Washington awake with her first A-bomb test in 1949, raced the U.S. closely to achieve a super-weapon, the H-bomb.

In 12 years, the U.S. has detonated 72 bombs. Russia at least 24 and likely more, Britain 10. Russia scored with the first real power-producing atomic plant. Britain is counting heavily on power from the atom within a few years. The U.S. has about a dozen civilian A-plants rising or planned.

With natural fuels facing depletion, the atom is a main hope for the world's future. There are billions in a teaspoon of water, 10 billion billion billion in your body.

The stupendous energy within the atom lies in its tightly packed core, composed of sub-atomic particles known as protons and neutrons. Break the heart of an atom, and some of its mass or material is changed into energy—heat, light and other radiations.

Break up billions of heavy uranium atoms in a split-second, and you have a chain reaction with a tremendous A-bomb explosion.

PRODUCES HEAT
Slow down the chain reaction, and you safely produce heat to make steam to run a turbine and produce electricity. This gives us atomic power plants and atomic submarines. It's like using the controlled flames of a burner on a gas stove, rather than sticking a match into an oven filled with leaking gas.

The A-bomb became a pip-squeak when scientists in 1953 first tapped the secret of the sun to produce hydrogen bombs.

The sun burns by fusing or putting together the hearts of light atoms—hydrogen—into heavier helium. Left-over bits of the fused atoms become energy, the sun's heat and radiation.

Fusing light atoms produce more energy than splitting heavy atoms.

To make the H-bomb go off, you must first produce tremendous heat and pressure. An A-bomb does this, and A-bombs are triggers for H-bombs.

But now the bright hope is to tame the H-reaction to produce

Very Fine Boat For U. S. A. Was Built In Georgetown

On Wednesday, July 10th, Mr. Harold Publicover, accompanied by Mr. Frank Rafuse left for North Reading, Mass., with a trailer-truck on which was loaded a 32 ft. 4 in fishing boat.

This fine boat was built last winter at Georgetown by Mr. Marcus Gotell, assisted by Mr. James Publicover. The proud owner of this fine craft is Mr. William Publicover of North Reading, Mass., who on Thursday, accompanied by his wife, left Georgetown by car on return home, following a holiday spent in the town of his birth. The owner plans on converting the craft into a cabin-cruiser by the simple process of building on a cabin. Into her construction went the finest of materials and workmanship and no doubt Mr. Publicover will show her with pride and also as a product of the fast disappearing art of boat building, which is still carried on in Georgetown by Mr. Gotell.

Doesn't Advise Wood Stove

KEMPTVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Mrs. Martha Gaw still uses a wood stove for cooking but she controlled, peaceful power. Scientists are hard at work seeking ways of doing this safely, without any explosions.

World supplies of uranium are limited. But if hydrogen power can be tapped, the sea can supply unlimited hydrogen atoms for power to satisfy man's needs for energy over the world.

doesn't advise young girls to do the same. Mrs. Gaw, chosen queen during centennial celebrations here, is just eight years younger than the town.

The 92-year-old native of this area who has never lived farther than 10 miles from Kemptville, marvels at the wonders of these times.

"I just can't get used to an electric stove."

She still uses her old-fashioned wood burner for cooking specialties for her friends and families but advises young women to stick with electric stoves.

"It takes years to get a perfect cake every time with my method."
