EDNA LYALL'S PERSONAGES.

The Authoress of "Donovan," "We Two," etc., Tells of Her Literary Work.

Edna Lyall, the famous English authoress, writes of "My Early Literary Influences" in the Ladies' Home Journal, and says concerning her methods of work and some of her characters: "It was not, however, hero-worship of the great characters of the past alone which influenced my future career as a novelist. Often a character in real life would suddenly stand out, as it were, from its surroundings, and become to me for no particular reason the hero or heroine of my next story. A child, who at a Christmas tree seemed intent on finding out what the other children wanted, and seeing, in an unobtrusive, tactful way, that the hostess understood their wishes, became for a time my heroine. A consumptive-looking assistant in a music shop, who seemed too good for his surroundings, but was alert and ready and civil, though apparently with one foot in the grave, became the hero of a childish story called 'Mervyn's Ordeal.' I remember there was a wicked uncle in it, who forged the hero's name, and made him falsely suspected by his employers, and that agony point was reached when the falsely-accused 'Mervyn,' suffering mental and physical torments, was set to tune pianos! He gallantly supported two sisters. I chose their lodgings for them in a dreary side street, leading out of King's Road, and recollect that their diet consisted largely of Dutch cheese! This was the forerunner of the 'Hardy Norseman.'

"But no one brought so much pleasure to me in school-room days as the celebrated Welsh singer, Edith Wynne—for whom I must always feel gratitude and affection. Quite unknown to herself, she was, by her beautiful voice and perfect oratorio-singing, giving untold delight to her small devotee at Brighton, who, at that time, being orphaned and unhappy, doomed moreover from frequent attacks of opthalmia to spend many weeks in idleness, sorely needed help and comfort. This devotion to a public singer led me to take the greatest interest in the musical world, and whenever the state of my eyes permitted it I was scribbling at a story about a charming Irish soprano named 'Cecil Keoghn,' who was the prototype of "Doreen.'"

An Inquisitive Child.

"Talk about children," said a young woman the other day, "Why, I'm honestly afraid of them. I feel just about as safe when a youngster is around as I would it a dynamite bomb was rolling about under my feet. It seems to me children are always striving to make a sensation. Sometimes I can't tell whether it is pure guilelessness or wicked premeditation on their part to do or say something that gives a want-to-sink-through-the-earth feeling to their elders.

"Now just imagine my sensations as a hostess when several people paid a most unexpected visit to my suburban home on Monday, the scrap day of all housekeepers, and settled down for luncheon.

"I hadn't time to get up any extras except hustle a few of my company preserves on the table and make a raid on my cake box. My only meaty relish was hash, but honestly it was 'all original goods,' as the boarding house lady declared.

"One of my visitors brought with her an inquiring young man of five. It seems this child has a mania for investigating the former condition of all eatables before they have passed into the cook's hands. I didn't know this at the time, so you can imagine my horror when the hash was brought on to see that child fasten his eyes upon it and, in the interests of culinary science, loudly ask: 'Mamma, what was that when it was alive?'"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Marble Making.

The example furnished by nature in the production of marble from chalk by water—the latter percolating gradually and steadily through the chalky deposits, dissolving the chalk particle by particle, and crystallizing it, mountain pressure effecting its characteristic solidity—it is now found may be the basis of accomplishing similar results by a resort to chemical processes. Slices of chalk are for this purpose lipped into a color bath, staining them with tints that will imitate any kind of marble known, the same mineral stains answering this end as are employed in nature. For instance, to produce the appearance of the well-known and popular verde antique an oxide of copper application is restored to, and in a similar manner green, pink, black and other colorings are obtained. The slices after this are placed in another bath, where they are hardened and crystallized, coming out, to all intents and purposes, real marble.

Ice From the Upper Air.

A Yankee farmer in Brazil who longed for the cooling liquids of his native land and was unable to obtain them in that tropical country, has utilized a kite for the purpose of obtaining ice. He fills a tin can with water and sends it to the height of three miles, where it is promptly frozen. After a sufficient interval the kite is rapidly hauled in and the cake of ice is secured. The inventor is so pleased with his toy that he now proposes to send up a kite 150 feet long by a steel wire cable. Under the kite will be suspended a pulley, over which runs an endless chain bearing cans attached to hooks. The cans will be filled with water, and the speed of the belt upon which they run will be regulated so that the topmost cans will be converted into ice sufficiently hard to stand the downward journey. This is certainly the most original ice machine of which we have ever heard.—South American Journal.

He Used Paine's Celery Compound.

Mr. McWilliams, of Brantford, Ont., was a terrible sufferer from rheumatism of the worst form. After experimenting with deceptive medicines, his attention was directed to that unfailing banisher of disease, Paine's Celery Compound, six bottles of which effected a perfect cure.

Rev. F. Smith, Presbyterian minister, certifies to the truthfulness of every statement. Mr. McWilliams briefly writes as follows:

"Unsolicited, I forward this testimonial as to the value of Paine's Celery Compound. I am pretty well up in years and was sorely afflicted with rheumatism. I purchased and used six bottles of your medicine and am now perfectly well; I have no rheumatism left."

Weak, Nervous Women.

One to whom a night's rest was unknown.

Strength and good health restored.

I was subject to frequent attacks of nervousness that seemed to sap all my vitality and left me in a state of weakness and misery. I could not relish food and such a thing as a good night's rest was unknown. Incapable of any exertion and with an ever present tired and despondent feeling. Medicines that I took did not do any good; it was a case of gradually becoming weaker and weaker. Hearing of Scott's Sarsaparilla and its success with similar cases to mine, I used it, and from the first few doses began to get better, appetite returned, got natural and refreshing sleep. I grew stronger, in fact life seemed to be fanned into activity.—Lottie Graham, 174 Crawford Street, Toronto.

For any weakness of the nerves, pale and sallow complexion, loss of appetite use the best blood and nerve remedy extant, Scott's Sarsaparilla. Insist on getting Scott's—imitations do not cure.

MET THE HEIRESS.

"An heiress, and handsome! By George, I must have an introduction." This was what Ralph Fitzsimmons said to himself. Aloud he uttered these words: "Made an impression on you, evidently, Howard."

"I'm going down to Rossville to be married to the only girl worth loving in the world," said Howard Gray, with a lover's excusable exaggeration; "but Miss Eleanor is a charming young lady, and I am intimate enough to introduce you, if you like."

"Ah!" said Fitzsimmons, veiling his delight, "thank you. I'm aged, I suppose; and engaged girls are such bores!"

"Heart free, I believe," said Howard. "She's extremely hard to please. Well, I'll ask her permission, and we'll call on Saturday evening."

To marry an heiress had been Ralph's dream ever since his whiskers began to grow. It was the easiest way of coming by a fortune of which he had ever heard; and Ralph detested labor and was fond of ease.

At present he was merely a clerk in a fancy store, on a salary which was certainly a small one, and he had resolved to marry and settle as soon as possible, whenever he could find any one whose purse was long enough.

And now that he was actually thrown in the way of a handsome woman, not only young and amiable, but good-looking—so said Howard, and Howard was a judge—his joy knew no bounds.

"Hard to please, is she?" said he to himself. "Ah, well, all the better for me. I fancy that I have a certain way with me that women find it difficult to resist, and I am certainly a very handsome man—remarkably handsome."

"Won't I go it?" said he to himself, as he munched his rolls and swallowed his coffee. "I was meant for a jolly life, and I'll have it."

And turning his hat sideways on his head he hurried to "the store," where his entrance was greeted by an angry glance from the proprietor, who advanced, watch in hand, and inquired courtly:

"Well, Mr. Fitzsimmons, are you aware that you are fifteen minutes late?"

"Perfectly, sir," said Fitzsimmons, pertly. "Fifteen minutes and a half. Mulct me a penny, sir. About the amount lost, I believe."

The head of the establishment turned purple with rage, but as the entrance of customers prevented him from "having it out with the young man," as he desired at once, he contented himself with howling, "No. 4, forward!" in terrific tones, and Fitzsimmons, otherwise "No. 4," did "forward" to his place, but slowly, and with much dignity, when a lady entered the store, and advancing straight to his counter, requested to "look at floss silks for embroidery."

She was a tall young lady, of very independent manners, dressed plainly. No one of any importance, of course, Fitzsimmons decided, would shop in such attire.

"What color?" he said, without moving, and with his hands in his pockets.

"Let me see your stock," said the lady.

"Can't you tell me what you want?" said Fitzsimmons.

"I have told you that I wish to look at your floss silks," said the lady.

"Oh," said Fitzsimmons. "Well, there they are. If they don't do I can't help it. I can't gratify the whims of females in regard to shades, and I've given up the attempt. Six and six are twelve, and——"

"I shall take none of those silks," said the lady, rising.

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, cried the proprietor, advancing. "Has anything——"

"Mr. Fitzsimmons called her a female," said "cash," who, like all "little pitchers," had "great ears."

"Mr. Fitzsimmons," hissed the indignant master of the store, "you and I must part. This won't do. You're a—a—a——"

"You're another!" said Fitzsimmons, completing the sentence over which the first gentleman had fallen flat, 'and I'm rejoiced to leave this confounded retail hole."

A few hours later he strutted into a gorgeous drawing room in Fifth avenue, in the wake of his friend Howard. Three people arose to greet them—an old gentleman, an old and a young lady.

"Mr. Brown, my friend Fitzsimmons. Mrs. Brown, Miss Eleanor."

Fitzsimmons smiled and bowed. The old gentleman began to talk, the old lady ditto. The young lady sat silent, and embroidered, with green floss silk on white velvet certain vine leaves and tendrils.

Fitzsimmons looked at her. He had seen her before. An awful memory flashed across his brain. He strove to banish it. Perhaps she would not recognize him. Perhaps——

"Industrious this evening, Miss Eleanor?" said Howard.

"Yes," said Eleanor. "I'm making a wedding present, and weddings are like time and tide—they wait for no one. I'm behind hand, too."

"Pity," said Howard.

"Yes," said Miss Eleanor. "Shopping for green silks of a certain shade kept me out all day."

"So hard to find?" asked Howard.

"Very," said Eleanor. "And you know the people in stores can't find time to gratify the whims of females, and have given up the attempt. Haven't they, Mr. Fitzsimmons?"

Fitzsimmons turned scarlet. The bright eyes had flashed upon him for once with meaning in them. The heiress was the lady in the waterproof, and she recognized him.

He had lost his situation, and his heiress also, merely because he had not been civil to a person in a waterproof cloak. It was a shocking reflection, but perfectly true; for the visit to the store had been no chance one on Eleanor's part.

She was romantic, and having had a glowing picture painted of Ralph's charms, desired to see him off guard for the first time, and thereby judge him better.

Faith.

Faith stands for the religion of the heart; work stands for the religion of the life. These two God has joined together. Let no man put them asunder; for there is no genuine religion without them in active union. Just as love in the soul finds a way to manifest itself so as to attract the attention, please and benefit the one loved, so genuine faith in the Lord Jesus moves its possessor to earnest, joyful action along lines of practical Christian usefulness. Where there is no such action there is no genuine faith.

Priestley's "Eudora" Cloth

"Eudora," is the name of the new black dress fabric put upon the market by the Priestley's, whose famous dress goods are a household word all over the world. It is like their much esteemed Henrietta cloths; indeed, it has all their merits, and a few things which they lack. It is made in black only, it is a perfect dust shedder; has extra weight and width; and, falling easily and draping gracefully it gives a distinction to the wearer which all of Priestley's goods confer. This is their excellence, which sets them apart from all other goods. "Eudora" is wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and Priestley's name is stamped on every five yards so that ladies cannot be deceived.
