Easy Literature.

It will require a close study of our best dictionaries to take in the full meaning of the following extract from an obituary notice of a Yankee editor:—' After a little more than a century's noontide, living years as a social cenobite; his hoariest age spent in abjuration of all companionship and [coterie life—senescence whose caducity was the greenest and most indisputable dorage—he is at last sarcophagated with the old men of all past time—and we mourn him as we wail those who have gone down to their inhumation in fullness of years, and no scantiness of the honors of the calling in which he was both a Nestor and a master hand.

A young lady at a temperance meeting said:

Brethren and sisters, cider is a necessity to me and I must have it. If it is decided that we are not to drink cider, I shall eat apples, and get some fine young man to squeeze me, for I tell you that I cannot live without that delightful nectar, the juice of the apple.

Life is a book in which we every day read a page. We ought to note down every instructive incident that passes. A crowd of useful thoughts cannot but flow from self-converse. Hold every day a solitary conversation with yourself. This is the way in which to attain the highest relish of existence, and if we may so say to cast anchor in the river of life.

When I lent her the eggs, said Mrs. Partington, she said she would be eternally indebted to me, and I guess she will. How can people do so? I would go round the world on all-fours a begging before I would be guilty of such a thing. Ah, well, it takes everybody to make a world!

And she put in saleratus enough to make up for the non-returned eggs. Her neighbor had decidedly taken a rise out of her.

A Siamese Idea of the Pianoforte.—One of the Siamese Ambassadors, on going home from his European visit made an elaborate report on all he had seen and heard in the West. He was very little impressed by the music, save and except that which he said was produced by "a great trunk set upon legs." "A woman," he wrote, "sits in front of this, and tickling a sort of tail it has with her toe, produces a variety of sounds by beating rapidly with her fingers on a number of little bits of ivory in front of it.

Matrimonial Forbearances.—Man and wife are equally concerned to avoid all offences to each other in the beginning of their conversation; a little thing can destroy an infant blossom; and the breath of the south can shake the little rings of the vine, when first they begin to curl like the locks of a new weaned boy; but when by age and consolidation, they stiffen into the hardness of a stem, and have by the kisses of heaven, brought forth their clusters, they can endure the storms and the loud noises of a tempest, and yet never be broken.

A couplet for young ladies

"The best of all ways to lengthen our days
Is—to go to bed early and never wear stays!"

A quaint writer says:—I have seen women so delicate that they were afraid to ride, for fear of the horse running away: afraid to sail, for fear the boat might be upset: afraid to walk, for fear they might fall; but I never saw one afraid to get married, which is far more riskful than all the others put together.

An editor became martial, and was created captain. On parade, instead of "two paces in front—advance"! he unconciously bawled out, "Cash—two dollars a year—advance."

Rev. Dr. Chapin says that a man living amid the activities of the nineteenth century is a condensed Methusalah.

A Yankee is raising black cats on an island in the Ohio for the sake of the fur. The business ought to be re-mew-nerative.

Modesty.—Nothing is more amiable than true modesty, and nothing more contemptible than that which is false; the one guards virtue, the other betrays it. True modesty is ashamed to do anything that is repugnant to right reason; false modesty is ashamed to do anything that is opposite to the humor of those with whom the party converses.

A Rebuke.—Dr. Arnold once lost all patience with a dull scholar, when the pupil looked up in his face and said, "Why do you speak so angrily, sir? Indeed, I am doing the best I can." Years after, the Doctor used to tell the story to his children, and say, "I never felt so ashamed in my life. That look and that speech I have never for-gotten.

Idleness is like the nightmare: the moment you begin to stir yourself you shake it off.

The monument of the greatest man should be only a bust and a name. If the name alone is insufficient to illustrate the bust, let them both perish.

There are moments when the two worlds, the earthly and spiritual, sweep by near to each other, and when earthly day and heavenly night touch each other in twilight.

Want of Independence.—A man should indeed be ashamed and afraid of what is really shameful; but to shrink under every reflection upon his character, though it implies an ingenuousness and delicacy of temper, has nothing in it of true greatness.

"You told me, neighbour Twist, when I paid Tim in advance, on his promising to work for me in haymaking time, that I should find him as good as his word." "To be sure I did, for I always knew his word was good for nothing."

The Real Champions of the Ring.—Mothers with daughters to marry.

He that scoffs at the crooked, had need go very upright himself.

The moment a man is satisfied with himself everybody else is dissatisfied with him.

FARMERS' DRESS

Probably no class of society, of equal respectability more nearly obey the Scriptural injunction, "Take no thought of—wherewithal ye shall be clothed"—than the farmer. The question of dress they are willing to leave to the feminine gender, or the more effeminate of the masculine. Yet we all are naturally attracted by a well-dressed and as naturally repelled by a shabbily dressed man. Henry Ward Beecher once used the expression—"True; dress does not make the man; but when he is made, he looks better dressed up."

It would certainly add to the respectability of the farming class, if they had a little more pride of appearance. Because a portion of society are carried by this pride into foolish and wicked extravagances, making it the highest aim of their existance to make a display of wearing apparel, it is no reason why another class should lower their dignity and excite disgust by appearing in society, clothed in soiled and ragged garments.

A farmer, while labouring, is brought into pretty close intimacy with dirt, and his clothes should correspond with his labour. To wear fine cloth and clean linen, while at work in the field, would be highly inappropriate, but when he rides into town with his family, or to market his produce, it would elevate his calling in the estimation of the world, if he were a little more careful of his appearance. No matter how independent we may feel—however we may affect to despise the opinions of others, we are none of us entirely insensible to the sneers of the coxcomb, much less to the disgust of the respectable tradesman or professional man.

The sentiment of ideality or love of beauty, is an important attribute to the human soul,—one which if properly cultivated, is calculated to conduce more to the refinement and elevation of the human race than any other, and is consequently never to be violated with impunity.

Farmers have changed a great deal within twenty years in regard for their personal appearance; but still, we frequently meet those in our cities who are so slovenly in their dress as to lower the reputation of their calling. There may be now and then a farmer so poor as not to afford a respectable suit to wear in society,—but the number is quite limited.

Brother farmers, let us do all we can to raise the standard of our calling. Let us show to the world that we can honestly earn our bread, and at the same time cultivate all those qualities which form the well-bred gentlemen! Gentleman-farmer, in its highest signification, is the title which we should strive to merit.

We find in one of our exchanges the following remarks relative to the use of castor oil in the trades, more particularly its application to leather.:—

It is much better to soften and redeem old leather than any other oil known. When boots and shoes are gressed with it, the oil will not at all interfere with the polishing afterward, as is the case with lard, olive, or any other oil. In Harrisburg, Pa., the old leather hose of the fire companies was greased with it, and found to become almost as flexible as new leather. Leather belts for transmitting motion to machinery will usually last three to five years, according to the wear and tear they are exposed to, when greased with castor oil they will last ten years or more, as they always remain flexible and do not crack. Beside this advantage, castor oil will prevent slipping, so that a belt three inches wide impregnated with it will be equal to a belt four and a half inches without castor oil. It is necessary, however, to wait twenty-four hours till the oil has disappeared from the surface and penetrated the leather, otherwise the freshly greased surface will cause slipping. The rats and other vermin detest anything impregnated with castor oil, and will not touch it—another advantage.

The Hen Roost.—Too little account is made of the droppings of the poultry house. The manure is richer than any other made on the farm—it is quite equal to guano. Every day or two the floor should be sprinkled with gypsum, and once a week or fortnight the whole should be swept up and mixed with three or four times its bulk of dried muck or charcoal.

If an accurate fit, a stylish cut, and superior workmanship can ensure custom, he flatters himself he shall not be without patronage from the tasty and discerning. Every trade requires brains, and none more so than the art of cutting and making up a garment to fit every variety of the human form; but some people seem to imagine that it requires no more judgment to cut a coat than to hew a log,—an erroneous idea, the effects of which are seen in the tasteless and ill-fitting garments we every day behold in the streets.
