When Dolly is Ill.

An odd branch of doll service is tending the pet in sickness. Dolls appear to be subject to all the complaints of their young nurses. They are physicked, too, by the familiar nursery methods.

The realistic impulse to detect something like the "poorly" look in the doll is illustrated by the diagnosis of leprosy in the case of a doll from whom "the paint was flaking off." If all the paint comes off and the doll takes on a pitiful pallor, there is a fine opportunity for the child's healing art. In one instance the appearance of measles was induced by the help of a red lead pencil. In another instance, when a doll was convalescent after fever, the "pretense" was supported by deliberately pulling out the hair. Fractures of limb or skull and slighter injuries leading to loss of the vital sustaining sawdust have, of course, to be treated surgically.

Doll surgery, however, to judge by the number of maimed and deformed figures which are to be found in doll land, would seem to be by no means universal among children.—Professor Sully in Contemporary Review

Machine and Rapid Fire Guns.

Machine guns are mechanically loaded with fixed ammunition and the cartridges are exploded and extracted by arrangements that enable a number of rounds to be fired in rapid succession by one man. The ordinary machine gun of the Maxim or Nordenfeldt type can fire from 300 to 700 rounds a minute of infantry ammunition, but for naval and fortress purposes a heavier type is made to discharge projectiles not exceeding 14 ounces in weight.

The term "quick firing" is applied to artillery weapons of all sizes which are so constructed and mounted that they can be loaded, sighted and fired more rapidly than in the case of an ordinary gun. Unlike machine guns, they are loaded by hand, but possess in common the characteristic of little or no recoil. All newly constructed guns are of a quick firing type, and the term will before long become obsolete. By the most recent arrangements for rapidity of loading and absorption of recoil the destructive power of artillery has been more than doubled.

Slavery is Not Yet Extinct.

It is generally supposed that slavery no longer exists in the United States of America, but by those who make a close study of such matters this will be promptly recognized as a very great mistake. In San Francisco alone there are said to be 600 Chinese women who are, so far as they know to the contrary, the property of their masters.

In Brooklyn quite recently a rather attractive young woman was sold to a Chinese laundryman for $600. The remarkable phase of the Chinese slavery which prevails in this country is that the victims do not seem to realize the abjectness of their condition and would very much prefer to remain here as they are than return to their native land and its daily grind for food, with the result of each day's efforts constantly in doubt.—Providence Telegram

The Fallacy of an Old Custom.

Obsolete ideas should give way to advanced thought in an advanced age. There is an inherent dislike to part with old ideas or customs. When we outgrew our childhood and discovered that Santa Claus was a myth, we parted regretfully from this harmless tradition. If no harm comes from the perpetuation of an old custom there is no reason for its discontinuance. There is one old custom which smacks of the Dark Ages, yet there are many otherwise sensible men and women in the ranks of its followers. It is the time-worn custom of taking a spring medicine. Just as the good housewife gives her house a thorough cleaning at springtime, so a great many people treat their systems. And why? Simply because they have neglected their health all the year. If nature's functions had been assisted, and her delicate machinery kept in good running condition throughout the year, she would meet the change of season in a natural way. Nature makes provision for this. Its daily, all-the-year-round health you want.

The daily use of Abbey's Effervescent salt will give it to you. It is Nature's great assistant. Take it daily and you'll always be in good health. There is nothing better to cleanse the system and purify the blood at any season. Physicians of the greatest prominence in Great Britain, Europe and Canada recommend and prescribe Abbey's Effervescent Salt as a blood purifier and system-regulator. It is the greatest preventive of disease known. All druggists sell it. Trial bottle 25 cents; large size 60 cents.
