

To a Tough Boy.

Young man, I have watched you with unqualified admiration. The first time my eyes beheld you, I saw at a glance that the aim and object of your existence was to be a tough boy, and you have since been my daily study, and each day has added to my delight in observing the rapid strides you are making toward your high and ennobling ideal.

The proficiency with which you master it.

I am pleased at the martyr-like devotion with which you struggle with the cigar at which your face pales, your head reels and your stomach trembles, and to which you adhere, nevertheless, with a more than Spartan firmness.

Again am I made happy at the fine, manly instinct which leads you to mingle choice slang and elegant profanity with your improving conversation, and I feel certain that the ladies, whom you are naturally proud to have as auditors, most wish that you were their own offspring, or at least that their boys could have the benefit of your exemplary companionship.

I presume that you are up to the taste of liquor also, for I cannot think that one so unambiguously and praiseworthy tough as you appear can have neglected so important an element of toughness as to take a drink now and then, and possibly occasionally to get tipsy. Of course you do not like the taste of liquors, any more than you delight in the flavor of tobacco. I understand that perfectly, and honor you all the more because of your self-denial. No worthy object can be achieved without more or less of discomfort; and I make sure that one day you will be a great destroyer of tobacco and a competent drunkard.

Young man, the path which you have marked out for yourself in life is perhaps not wholly without its rough and rugged places, but it is full of promise for yourself and for others also.

The ruddy glow in your cheeks which betrays your youth—of which as a tough you are naturally ashamed—will shortly turn to the livid hue which marks the Man, with a capital M, and your elastic step will after a time materialize into the elegant slouch of that apotheosis of the tough boy, the Dead Beat. Your pearly teeth will long ere then have turned to a beautiful amber, or still more beautiful jet, if, indeed, you have not succeeded in casting them from you as reminders of childhood, and therefore unworthy of so transcendent a character as yourself.

In that happy day you will have risen above the few weaknesses which yet adhere to you. You will have overcome the foolish pride which causes you to wash your face every day of your life and which leads you to wear clothing fashionable in cut and devoid of tatters. You will also have risen above the sordid ambition of securing a name and a place in the world, or of reaching that station of affluence of which in your childish moments you still dream. In a word, you will have become the perfect being, the butterfly of which you are as yet (I beg your pardon) but the ugly grub.

And then the good you are destined to accomplish! In a few years you will have so far succeeded in demoralizing your stomach, and racking your nerves, and wearing out your heart, and, in short knocking out your entire physical system, that you will be the making of the fortunes of a half a score of doctors; and should you succeed in finding a young woman fool enough to marry you, and should you have children, it will be your proud satisfaction to know that your greenness shall live after you, and that your children, thanks to their parent's toughness, shall in their turn greatly aid in making the medical profession profitable one so long—or, rather, so short—as they shall live.

Yes, young man, you are a noble creature. Keep on in your glorious career, and when your epitaph is written, a few years hence, let it consist only of these simple but proud words: "He was a tough."

MANHOOD

How Lost, How Restored. We have recently published a new edition of DR. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cts or two postage stamps. The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land. Address: THE CULVERWELL MEDICAL CO., 41 Ann St., New York. Post Office Box 450.
