Dief's Blast At Robarts Has Observers Puzzled

By KEN KELLY
OTTAWA (CP)—Why did Opposition Leader Diefenbaker give the Liberals the chance to say he was publicly displaying a rift between him and Ontario Premier John Robarts? This question has been puzzling Liberals and Progressive Conservatives here since Mr. Diefenbaker said last Thursday the Ontario legislature had affronted Parliament by endorsing a motion of the Robarts government agreeing to a new constitutional amending formula.

Transport Minister Pickersill had an immediate explanation for Mr. Diefenbaker's action, which appeared to be critical of Mr. Robarts who is leader of the provincial wing of Mr. Diefenbaker's own party.

It was clearly dictated by sheer, blind hatred," the Liberal cabinet minister said gleefully after Mr. Diefenbaker's statement.

He was obviously overjoyed at what he regarded as an open fight between the federal and Ontario Progressive Conservatives on a major policy question.

In effect, Mr. Diefenbaker was telling Mr. Robarts and anyone else that the federal Conservatives will make up their own minds about the proposed constitutional amending formula.

Mr. Diefenbaker's mind already is made up if his public comments on the formula are any indication. He called it a formula leading to the "balkanization" of Canada.

STAND NOT STATED
But the party's stand on the formula has not been stated in the Commons, where such things really count.

There has not been a chance to do so because the formula itself hasn't been placed before Parliament and probably won't be until the next parliamentary session.

Meanwhile, the Conservative MPs have been discussing behind closed doors what stand the party should take.

Informants indicate a strong group is opposed to lining up with Mr. Diefenbaker against the formula which Mr. Diefenbaker is said to regard as a good issue on which to try to force the government to call an election.

By his action in the Commons, Mr. Diefenbaker may have been trying to exert a little public pressure on these recalcitrants to get them to fall into line.
