A BRAVE ACT.—A Halifax despatch says: Two brothers, named Evans and Ave, aged 14 and 15, belonging to Eastern Passage, rowed across the channel to McNab's island to dig clams. The dory upset and the boys were precipitated into the water. Two delicate little girls, sisters, named Mary and Bridget Black, aged 12 and 14 years, witnessed the accident from the island and immediately launched a boat and rowed to the assistance of the drowning boys. Evan clung to the boat and it was difficult to get at him, as the boat oscillated around, and the weight of the almost unconscious boy kept part of it beneath the water. The little girls got Evan into the boat, and Mary Black, aged only 14, made a desperate clutch at the other boy as he went down, and at arm's length below the surface, got hold of his hair; but his hair was cut short and there was no hold, so he sank. The girls then rowed the boy they had saved to land and worked with him until he returned to consciousness. Summer Corsets!
