Combines Act Can Be Friend, Decision By Group Reveals

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

The Combines Investigation Act so often regarded as an ogre by business, apparently can also be a friend.

This appears to be the attitude toward it taken by the Canadian Steel Warehouse Association Inc., whose members sell steel in various forms to small- and medium-sized buyers.

The association, in brief, sees in the legislation an aid to more stable price and marketing conditions within its industry.

Its new look at the legislation started with a conference on the subject held by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Toronto in January last year, which was addressed by Justice Minister Fulton and in which combines officials were panelists.

As a result of this session warehousing officials decided the legislation has more than one side.

It has its well-known side of forbidding any agreement between members of industry as to the price they charge. But it also has less-well-known provisions against discrimination.

As interpreted by the association it is discrimination on the part of a seller to charge one price to one customer and a different price to another. And it also forbids the customer to knowingly enter into an arrangement for a better price than that offered his competitor. The association says:

"Section 33A provides that no person engaged in business shall discriminate amongst his trade customers who are competing with each other, by giving one of them a price concession which is not available to his competitors in respect of sales of like quality and quantity."

EQUALLY LIABLE

It adds:

"The recipient of a discriminatory price may be equally liable with the seller of an offence against Section 33A where he consciously enters into an agreement that he knows will constitute an offence on the part of the seller."

Out of its study of these provisions the association urges its members to adopt an open pricing policy, under which they would publish price lists and ensure that all customers are charged the same prices. It hopes that such a policy will cure unsettled pricing and associated conditions in the steel warehousing industry.

The appeal to members is partly on ethical grounds and in their own self interest but the teeth seem to lie in the combines legislation.

At a press conference an association spokesman commented:

"If industry complied in all respects with the combines law we would probably have healthier industry. But business has been so concerned with the price-fixing provisions that few have taken time to look into other aspects."

The association spent about a year and a half studying the legislation, and consulting with combines officials, before launching its program. It has issued in English and French a booklet summarizing the results of its studies, prepared under the guidance of John J. Robinette, Toronto lawyer.

It believes other industry could take a second look at the legislation with informative results.

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

You don't ever take things for granted if you're a really careful declarer. Instead, you assume the worst may happen and then make every possible effort to guard against it.

Here's a hand where it would be easy to go wrong, and yet, if you think the matter over, there's no good reason for falling down on the job.

Suppose you're South, playing four spades, and West leads the king of diamonds. There seems to be nothing to the hand when dummy comes down—you have two hearts and a club to lose—and everything looks fine.

But yet, being careful, you say to yourself it's possible to go down; after all, trumps have been known to break 4-0. So this starts you thinking that maybe something can be done to cover this possibility.

There's one quick way of finding out whether trumps are going to break all right, and that's by leading them. So you play the ace of spades, on which West shows out, and your worst fears are realized.

Now a challenging problem has arisen. You have to lose a club and a spade, come what may, and the only way to savage the hand is to cut your heart losers from two to one. This presents a special question —how the opponents' hearts can be divided so that only one heart trick will be lost.

A little thought brings the answer. West overcalled with two hearts, but he doesn't necessarily have to have the K-J-10 for his bid. East may have one of the honors, despite his pass. If this is the case, a satisfactory solution is possible.

Accordingly, you lead a spade to the queen and return a low heart from dummy. When East follows low, you play the nine. West takes the jack and returns a diamond which you ruff.

You cash the king of spades and then lead the queen of hearts, hoping for the best. It doesn't matter whether or not West covers. The king and ace are trapped and you lose only one heart trick, thus making the contract.
