

Life Styles

by Lori Anne Heckbert

Hi! I'm sick, how are you? Seriously, folks, if I walk up to you, and out of the blue (I think I missed my calling - note rhyme) say, "I want drugs", it's not because I'm a space cadet, it's because I'm sick.

Now, I'm not asking you to pity me, that would be pathetic. I'm telling you to pity me; that is being strong-willed.

I like that. I want to stop now. Yeah . . .

But I shall persevere. I'm going to ramble a little bit about places to study. Personally, I hate study carrels, community tables, and closets with windows (even though the windows help to surpress the claustrophobia).

I can think of three places on campus where it's super quiet. But listen, if all you really want to do is socialize, stay away - there are people who need to get work done.

First, second, and third prizes go to the Canadian Studies Lounge, the English Lounge, and the reading room on First floor Bernadine, in that order.

The first of these is just a beautiful room, third floor Main Building. The second is located in the annex to Main Building, second floor. As for the third - three guesses, the first two don't count. If you can't figure it out, leave this institution, you're going to be an academic dismissal anyway.

My editor thinks I'm delirious. She may be right ... does laughing like an idiot constitute delirium? Let's try and get more voter turnout for this question than at the Student Council elections, ok?

Where was everybody this weekend past? Why weren't you at the last two home games of the soccer season?

No, this isn't twenty questions.

Really, though, can't you support the one varsity team that has a chance to bring home the bacon? Have you no school spirit? Don't tell me you were exercising your will, tell me why you didn't exercise your legs and vocal chords. (N.B. this is for people who didn't go, only Everyone else skip ahead - am I late with this announcement?)

Did you miss the pub last week? It was held at the Showboat for this week only, and it was a GOOD time. I think that's what made me so ill, I can't stand that much fun.

I talked to my good buddy Howie Beattie, about the reason behind the missed event, and he told me he has to leave some pubs open to campus sub-organizations falling under the heading "Kinsmen, Knights of Columbus, and Others". No one snatched it up, hence no pub.

Here's a tidbit for all you people who were so enraged that Howard wouldn't let Red Ryder into the Haywire pub. Apparently, there was only a remote chance that one of these roady types could conceivably, with much plastic surgery, ever look like a member of the above mentioned group.

Aside from that, and this being the real reason for Howie's decision to deny them entry, the Barn's liquor license could hve been withdrawn because there would have been too many people in the Barn.

Howard tells me there is something new starting up at the Barn Sunday evenings. The Barn will be opening at 6:30 p.m. and movies from the movie pub Friday afternoons will be shown once again, starting at 7 p.m.

The difference will be that there will be a more relaxed atmosphere. There will be no liquor sold, but there will be a bartender on duty to sell non-alcoholic beverages.

having injected three Anacin's fifteen minutes ago, I fel better - but I have become a space cadet, as I threatened earlier. I must leave you now. Stop sobbing, I'll be back next week, hopefully in better shape. Have an Eno on me, and take care of yourselves. Bye!

Raleigh voyage sparks new expedition

By Gary Luton

Notable Elizabethan explorer Sir Walter Raleigh set out on a voyage of discovery and founded North America's first English speaking colony. Now 400 years later, a 290-foot vessel which carries his name is off to circumnavigate the globe, to honour the man and to recapture his spirit of adventure.

Called Operation Raleigh, the expedition will begin in England this November and will travel to 40 countries on six continents by 1988. It will involve 4,000 young people aged 17-24, at least one hundred of them from Canada.

The largest multinational project of its type, Operation Raleigh is under the worldwide patronage of Prince Charles. Its Canadian Chairman is Dr. Joseph MacInnis, a well known diver and arctic scientist.

Participants for Operation Raleigh will be selected from across the country. Those who are accepted will work on one of the expeditions 16 phases for a three to four month shift.

Participants in the program will become involved in land-based community aid projects in various countries, as well as marine exploration and experimentation.

Projects include diving in the Blue Holes of the Bahamas; conducting archaeological digs in Honduras and Latin America; constructing areal walkways to study the canopy of the tropical rain forest; taking part in the U.S.-based See International Program which performs cataract operations in remote areas, and a host of small, community projects such as irrigation and sanitation programs in primitive villages.

that applicants are able to speak English, are fit and able to swim. Disabled young people are encouraged to apply.

Funds for the expedition will come mainly from service groups and corporate sponsors. The Operation Raleigh Foundation is a non-profit charitable organization.

Participants are expected to generate $2,000 through their own fund raising initiatives to cover part of the $6,000 cost. However, no one will be excluded for financial reasons.

Operation Raleigh offers a unique opportunity to go beyond one's national borders and to experience different lifestyles in the name of science and community service. It brings back the whole idea of exploration and discovery, a spirit that can still be grasped by those who seek it.

Gary Luton is the Regional Coordinator for Operation Raleigh Canada.
