This vicinity could ill afford the passing and loss of these two men who spent most of their lives serving the public in a pleasant way. The hearse light always burned in the station window at night and Mr. McInnis never said, "It's after hours," to anyone, no matter the hour it was. Agents will come and go at this station but we doubt if ever there will be another John F. McInnis. Such obliging men come only once in a generation to such a position.

Dear old river Montague You are going to live again Thanks to the dredge and all the crew Who helped your dignity to retain, Larger vessels you can greet Now your channel is deep and wide No more trouble will you meet Or wait reverses of the tide. You will flow so clean and shiny And you will murmur soft and low Like you did when I was tiny And that was O, so long ago. Often then I gathered pebbles From the red sand on your shore Seeming then like precious medals I'd like to do it just once more. The body of the creek is gone It was once your lovely child They left the mouth alone to yawn Dear creek that once so sweetly smiled. You will find me oft' romancing Dear river Montague You're so beautiful, enchanting All the blessed seasons through. Summer time your banks are green Where wild flowers spread and grow And the tall white birches lean As if to watch your ripples flow. High upon their bird like perches Are tourists cabins white and low Shaded by the friendly birches While through their branches soft lights show. —Lena Vessey
