Promise By German Could Mean Much

By J.M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst

One little promise made in connection with French ratification of the Western European Union accords, if kept and projected into the future, could mean more to Europe than all the alliances these countries have ever signed.

It came from a jubilant Chancellor Adenauer of Germany. "The German government," he said, "will do everything in its power to merit the confidence of the French people and to further develop French-German relations."

The treaties, the chancellor said, will make a future German-French war impossible. In themselves, they won't. They never have. But if the two nations could really establish confidence, they would.

The chancellor spoke against the larger background of fast-moving Western efforts to follow-up ratification of the treaties with a new approach to Russia, using their new-found unity as a lever.

Now that she has been beaten on the treaty issue—with ratification by the United States, Denmark and the Benelux countries expected to be routine—the West is hoping that Russia will at last get down to realistic negotiations on such issues as German reunification and an Austrian peace treaty.

THREAT OMITTED

It was noted that Russian Premier Bulganin, in taking a "positive attitude" toward Western suggestions for negotiations, got completely away from the recent Russian threat that ratification of the treaties would make this impossible, and instead referred to the fact that Moscow had already taken steps to resume work on an Austrian setlement.

It was also noted, however, that the great Russian objective has been to prevent rearmament of Germany, and that she will have quite a long time in which to work before the new accords produce any considerable new military force.

Russia can still come into negotiations with the demand that the Allies trade off prospective German power for agreements which, if kept, would mean peace in Europe. She might keep the whole business up in the air for a long time by such tactics.

Yanks Eat More Canned Food

LONDON (Reuters)—Americans eat far more canned food than any other people, it was disclosed here today.

A Commonwealth economic committee report published here shows that the average person in the United States consumes about 120 pounds of canned food a year. Canadians eat about 95 pounds a year, Britons between 30 and 40, and Australians slightly less.

Britain tops the list in canned food imports, followed by the United States and Canada. The reports, which traced recent developments in the world's canned food industries, said these three countries are the receivers of about half the world's total canned food exports.

Without the protection of fire, automobile and casualty insurance your community would be a very different place. Fire-gutted buildings seldom would be replaced. Families would be thrown into a lifetime of debt by the costs of automobile accidents and other liabilities arising from mishaps and errors. Few people would risk their money on investments. Industries would go bankrupt. Jobs would be lost.

Today in Canada, the insurance business provides protection against nearly every conceivable risk. Fire insurance alone safeguards property valued at $32 billion. And claims totalling more than $200,000,000. are paid each year to offset the costs of a variety of mishaps —from people slipping on stairs to tornados. In this way, the insurance business makes a substantial contribution towards Canada's continued security and prosperity.
