Ice Conditions Look Better For Lobster Season Opening

If the present weather conditions prevail, fishermen should not have any trouble finding open water to set their lobster traps in with the season opening May 1, it was speculated by E.K. MacNeil, district manager of the department of transport, last night.

West winds prevailing, a strong ice existing around the coast should soon be cleared keeping with the present trend of the moving ice field. North-east winds, however, would shift the ice and move it back towards the coast.

A large field of ice, however, remains near Pictou Island, George Bay, and between East Point, Magdalen Islands, and the Cape Breton coast. Cabot Strait is also plugged east of the moving ice field.

A very heavy field of ice is extending from Cavendish to Cape Point and west to Charlottetown harbor is mainly clear with some soft ice but the greater part still remains at the mouths of the York and Hillsboro rivers.
