THE DAILY EXAMINER.

OCTOBER 10, 1882.
A Tourist's Ramble.

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF ANNAPOLIS—COMPARISONS OF THE FARMING INDUSTRY —FRUIT GROWING—INTERESTING TO AGRICUL-TURALISTS.
Two years before the establishment of the first English settlement in America, and fifteen years before the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, the French, under De Monts, established themselves at the head of Annapolis Basin, and named their colony Port Royal, now known as Annapolis. Nine years after its settlement Port Royal was attacked and taken by an English expedition, from Jamestown, Virginia, and continued, until the capture of Quebec by the English in 1759, to be a battleground for the forces of France and England. The visitor to Annapolis and Horton must ever feel his interest in these places intensified, when he remembers that it was at Annapolis that the English and French first crossed swords for the possession of North America, and that Horton witnessed one of the closing scenes of that great struggle, viz., the expulsion of the Acadians in 1755. The remains of the old fortification at Port Royal are still sufficiently imposing to impress a visitor with the strength of the place.

It is now more than a century and a quarter since the last hostile shot was fired in the valley of Annapolis. The "brain-spattering, windpipe-splitting science of war" has given place to a noble emulation in practising the gentle arts of peace; and a tour from Windsor to Annapolis demonstrates the truth of Milton's words, —
"Peace hath her victories, not less renowned than war."

Sheltered by the North Mountain which stretches from Blomidon, at the Basin of Minas, to Digby Neck, and bounded on the south by a corresponding ridge, called the South Mountain is a majestic valley, which forms probably one of the finest apple-growing countries in the world. In a large bog not far from Berwick, two rivers have their sources. The Cornwallis which runs eastward and empties into the Basin of Minas, and the Annapolis, which meanders in an opposite direction, watering the valley of Annapolis, and emptying into the Basin of the same name. Through the centre of this valley, lies the track of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, and from the car windows the eye of the passenger fairly revels in the beauties of the country. Rich dyked lands by the side of the river, covered with cattle; uplands on both sides of the river to the foot of the mountains, appearing like continuous orchards; charming villages each "almost answering Goldsmith's description of the principal characteristics of the plain," are
