to Business, Honesty and Square Dealing, and prying

L. E. PROWSE

to the front of all competitors, in CLOTHING, HATS, &c.

He does not advertise to sell goods at cost, but he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than those who do advertize to sell at cost.

He does not try to deceive the people by making a big blow and offering paltry rewards, but tries to do things right and has the goods to back him up in what he advertizes.

He has now about 6,500 HATS and $4,000 worth of CLOTHING, which he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than any house in the trade. A lot of this Clothing was bought less than half price, and will be sold less than half price.

He does not ask the people to believe his advertisement until they see his prices; he knows then they will believe, and knows that the goods and prices back him up every time.

All goods freely shown, or sent to any part of the town.

Please don't forget to call.

Ethel DeWolfe

—OR—
SHADOWS AND SUNSHINE.

BY S. M. BENT.

CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)

All through that winter Sister Margaret went about her lowly duties in the great hospital, beloved and blessed by all. She read to the sufferers, bathed their brows, soothed them to sleep; tenderly dressed their wounds, wrote their loving messages to wives and sweethearts, and wherever she moved through the crowded wards, sunshine and smiles seemed to follow her, till the gruff old surgeon proudly declared that she did more good and saved more lives than a dozen doctors.

When the campaign opened in the spring she went with the army, and many a poor fellow in the hospital cried bitterly when the kind Sisters left, and their places were filled by other nurses.

"My duty is now," said Ethel, "in another sphere; you will soon be going to your homes, to meet your wives and children, and you don't need me any longer; I must go where there will soon be more suffering, such as you have already passed through."

So, followed by the heartfelt benisons of those whose weary hours had been brightened by her loving ministrations, she took her place in the devoted band of noble women who followed the Army of the Potomac, and whose names will never be forgotten while the remembrance of the rebellion lives.

On many a battle field, where the leaden bullets flew like hail, and where the galling fire cut down men like grass before the mower's scythe, there was she to be seen, like one of heaven's ministering angels, brightening and glorifying, by a prayer, a comforting word, a message to some loved one, or a cup of cold water, the dying moments of the poor fellows who freely gave their lives at their country's bidding.
There was she, with her devoted companions, alleviating the sufferings of the wounded, and cheering them with words of hope and deeds of kindness and love, until the name of "Sister Margaret" became a synonym for all that is good and loving and gentle and angelic in woman. As the sweet singer pictured Evangeline in the plague-stricken city,—

"The dying looked up into her face and thought, indeed, to behold there Gleams of celestial light encircle her forehead with splendor,
Such as the artist paints o'er the brows of saints and apostles,
Or such as hang by night o'er a city seen at a distance."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE STORM DIES AWAY—SUNSHINE.

"But the day of vengeance cometh—He will set His people free, Though He lead them like His Israel, through a red and bloody sea:
For the tears and groans of bondmen, staining deep the frightened sea,
And the wailing cry of millions, riseth daily up to God!"

—Mary A. Livermore, (1856.)

"You are the Count of Lara, but your deeds Would make the statues of your ancestors Blush on their tombs."

—The Spanish Student.

The last red battle of the civil war was over, the last cannon had thundered at the gates of Richmond, the last death dealing volley had rattled along the lines, the last cloud of sulphurous smoke had rolled away, the last drum beat had sounded the homeward march, and the last blow of the rebellion had been given—in Lincoln's assassination. The dark days of the Republic had passed by, night had flown before the rising beams of the sun of liberty, as it once more shone brightly on the golden domes of the fair temple of Freedom, and showed in all its gloomy hideousness the downfallen structure whose keystone was slavery. A new era dawned upon the nation that had just passed through a scourging and purifying ordeal of fire, whose fairest fields were drenched with the blood of fallen heroes, and all the kindred nations of the earth sent forth a joyful anthem of triumph.

As long as the cycles of revolving years shall record the intertwining history of England and America, as long as man shall love liberty and hate oppression, as long as our language shall be spoken by the descendants of the old races, till the sun shall be darkened, and the moon and stars refuse to shed their gentle light, till the last moment of time, side by side, and crowned with never-dying fame,—will live the names, loved and honored, of those noble men who emancipated their dark-skinned brethren, and removed the curse of slavery from the lands it was blighting.—William Wilberforce and Abraham Lincoln. And wreathed with theirs is another name, that of the gifted Harriet Beecher Stowe.—Let their names live! In fading letters of gold they are written on the hearts of emancipated slaves and their children and children's children. They are revered as those who struck the galling fetters from sable limbs, and helped them to stand forth free as the balmy air that plays through the fragrant orange and magnolia groves, the plantations, the corn and cotton fields, and rice farms of those fair river sides once stepped in the most loathsome vice by which man can debase his fellow man; free as the winds that caressingly kiss this lovely land of clear skies, where the sun-of orange and yellow over the wide lagoons, with mer sun shines over the wide lagoons, with their bordering cactos and oleander and palmetto, over the moss-strung shores where the tossing waves sing the glad song of freedom, over the land whose wild bowers granate, over the palm and banana and pomegranate, whose gentle breezes, laden with the delicious perfume of a thousand wonderful flowers, whose bright song-birds, and rich moonsets, and purple gloamings, and rosy sunlit skies, are the realization of the poet's fairest dream.
