VETERINARY SERVICES

In the first eleven months the four practicing veterinarians have treated over nine thousand animals. These veterinarians are located at O'Leary, Kensington, Charlottetown and Montague.

There are several ways in which livestock breeders can assist in promoting a better service. One of the important things is to call the veterinarian as soon as the animal becomes sick or is off feed. Ask for his advice in the care and handling of such animals. Telephone calls should be made, when possible, before nine in the morning. This enables the veterinarian to plan his day and thus give better service.

As of the first of May Dr. John E. Sterns, Charlottetown, will no longer be operating under the Veterinary Service Policy.

During the early part of June two additional practitioners will be located in the Province. One veterinarian will be in the Charlottetown area and the other with headquarters in Souris.

Warble Fly Control

The livestock breeder can cut losses and increase production by treating for Warbles. It is not too late to get the powder to kill the grubs. Two treatments are required at about two weeks apart. Ten cattle can be treated with one pound of powder. Treat for warbles and save money.

Nutrition

Nutrition is a subject which receives a great deal of attention verbally and in print. However, Miss Robin and Mrs. Manning of the Women's Work Division do extensive work in this regard in the home. The following is the first of a series of two articles dealing with Child Nutrition:

Today farmers are very interested in the nutrition of their farm animals. They know that unless a dairy cow is well fed she will not produce the quantity of milk with the high percentage of butter fat that she should produce. They know that hogs will not grade Select if they've been fed an unbalanced ration, if they're overweight or underweight. Great care is exercised in the feeding of livestock because it is important economically. It's a pity that the nutrition of children does not loom importantly in the farm accounts because the nutrition of the growing human, is too often dismissed as unimportant by the farmer.

All winter many children exist on a diet of white bread, meat, potatoes, with few, if any, other vegetables, pie, cake, cookies and jam. Food costs are relatively high but any mention of Nutrition immediately suggests to many that food costs will rise still further. This is a false idea. Good nutrition does not necessarily entail the expenditure of more money on food. Frequently the practice of good nutrition can bring down food costs. Some of our best foods are those produced on the farm and cost little more than the labour involved in producing them.

Of great importance to the infant, and the growing child is milk, pure clean milk from T. B. tested cows carefully handled to prevent the growth and spread of bacteria. This should be available on every Island farm. Then there is the problem of getting children to drink it. Keep it as cold as possible and never give a preschool child as much as a taste of tea or coffee. Father and mother should never mention that they do not care for milk in front of the children.

Vegetables and fruit rank high in the nutritious diet and many more vegetables could be grown on Island farms than are grown at the present time. On the fine spring day when mother spends the day indoors baking cakes and pastries she would be much better employed spending the time in her garden.

Men, far too often, regard the garden as a nuisance instead of an investment in health for themselves and their children. Up to date methods of storage, canning and freezing, where possible, should insure a supply of vegetables for year round use. Fruits are a little harder to supply although home grown apples, strawberries, raspberries, and other small fruits can add considerably to a nutritious diet. Money spent on oranges, and other citrus fruits is a much better investment for health than the same amount spent on candy and confections for fancy baking. Start children on fruits and vegetables when very young and introduce them to as many as possible. Variety goes hand in hand with good nutrition.
