ENGINES AND DRIVERS.

The Peculiarities of Various Locomotives as Shown in Their Runs.

It takes about an hour to get steam enough on an ordinary locomotive engine to start it, from cold water. It is a familiar fact that the water in the boilers of steam fire engines in cities is kept hot while the engine is standing in the house by a pipe connection with a boiler in the cellar underneath; when the engine starts its own fire is lighted. Locomotive engines that are running regularly stand in the round house in the intervals between runs with their fires banked. The fires are kept cleaned, but they may not be hauled for weeks. The practice varies somewhat in this respect. On some roads fires are hauled once a week, on other roads they are kept up in engines for three or four weeks or more continuously.

A locomotive engineer on one of the fastest runs out of New York says that he has never seen an engine that would run as fast as he would like to ride. No apprehension apparently is felt by the engineer of a fast engine. Calmness is one of the most noticeable traits; and if he worries at all it is because he has got a hot box, or something has happened so that he may not be able to make the time, and not because he is going through the air at fifty, sixty, seventy miles an hour. But it should be understood that none but a man of perfect nerve is likely to reach the footboard of a fast engine.

There is not a vast difference between running at night and at day. Signal lights at night are plainer and can be seen at a much greater distance than day signals. The engineer must, of course, keep constantly in mind where he is, but he comes to know the country just as a pilot knows his landmarks in the dark, and he has this advantage of the pilot that he can't very well get out of the channel. Most engineers prefer day runs, because it seems more natural to work in the daytime, and it is pleasanter.

Almost all locomotive engineers prefer a fast run to a slow one. The fast trains are the blue ribbons of the road. Aside from the honor of running a fast train, there is a very substantial advantage in the hours. If an engineer simply stepped into his cab in the station and stepped out again on his return, almost any run might do well enough, but he doesn't do that; he goes to the round house before train time and looks over the engine, and sees that it is in condition and properly supplied for the run and in every way ready, and he runs the engine to the station. All this takes time. On his return he runs the engine to the roundhouse; this takes time, too, though not so much as the time spent before the run; but together these periods add materially to the length of the engineer's hours. Taking these duties into account, the great advantages of a fast run are manifest; the shorter the time spent on the road the shorter the total time.

There is a common impression that no two locomotive engines work just alike, even though made from the same patterns. A locomotive engineer of long experience says that the impression is correct. He says by way of illustration, that two high-grade watches of the same pattern, and supposed to be just alike, may not work the same way. One may not vary half a minute in six months, and so be, practically, a perfect timekeeper, while the other may vary a minute in a month. It is so with engines; they do not work just alike. One may steam and run better than the other. The slightest variation in finish or adjustment might be sufficient to cause this. When the new engine has been run a year or so it goes to the shop to be overhauled. With it goes a report of the engineer who has run it on the engine's characteristics and performance. If the engine has developed any defects they can usually be remedied at this overhauling, and it may be that the engine comes out on the road again as smart as any of them.—New York Sun.

Pretty Girls Not Wanted.

Here is a little story which seems to indicate that the pretty girl's business prospects are hampered by her prettiness.

The secretary of a large eastern insurance company decided a short time since that it would be better for his office work to introduce half a dozen or more women as typewriters, operators, and assistant bookkeepers. He had noted that of the feminine employes in his office the pretty ones were the least effective and attracted the most attention, to the detriment of the work of the other clerks. So he decided to engage only women who were of mature years and experienced in office work. First he advertised, stating that applicants should give age and number of years' experience. He did not succeed in getting a single satisfactory reply. Then he went to a well-known business college and told the manager that he did not suppose he would have any trouble in aiding him, as he did not want a young or attractive-looking woman.

The manager listened to him while he explained his wants, and then, going to a desk, took out a file of letters with a smile and laid them before his visitor. There were upwards of half a hundred applications from banks and commercial institutions, and every one of them, without a single exception, asked for a woman of mature age. The manager said that it was absolutely impossible to supply the demand for employees of the description that business men now demanded, but he had rafts of pretty girls at all times who were applicants.—Philadelphia Press.

Submarine Volcano

The French Geographical Society has received from General Venukoff a communication describing a submarine volcano, which is under survey by the officers of the Russian dispatch vessel Lotzman. The volcano declared itself last summer, and, although under sea water level in the Caspian, projected a large quantity of mud and debris into the air. As a result of the survey, the position of the volcano has been determined as 38 degrees, 13 minutes, 30 second north latitude and 52 degrees, 37 minutes east longitude from Greenwich meridian, and above 24 miles from shore. The diameter of its crater is less than 20 feet, and at 200 fathoms from its centre the depth of water is about eight fathoms, while at a distance of one mile the sea has its normal depth.

FAMOUS VOICES.

Forrest had a deep bass voice that seemed to come from the bottom of his chest.

Bunyon had what was called a persuasive voice. He never scolded in his sermons.

Jeremy Taylor was always very much in earnest, and showed the fact in his voice.

Lord Byron had a voice described by one of his contemporaries as "very smooth and oily."

Henry VII. had a voice so gruff that it earned for him the sobriquet of "Bluff King Hal."

Garrick had an exceedingly flexible voice, and could mimic anyone he ever heard speak.

The Duke of Marlborough had a voice that, it was said, could be heard above the roar of artillery.

Jonathan Edwards had sharp, strident tones that grated unpleasantly on the ears of all who heard him.

Old Kaiser Wilhelm had a soft voice, and spoke in a soothing tone that gave pleasure to every hearer.

Brignoli was know as the "silver-voiced." His tones, though not strong, were exceedingly pure and sweet.

John Adams had a cool, deliberate way of speaking, that carried conviction to the minds of his hearers.

Wendell Phillips always spoke in an ordinary tone, with very distinct articulation and careful pronunciation.

Cowper always spoke in a diffident, hesitating way, as though afraid of the effect of his words on his auditors.

Prince Bismarck has a very loud, harsh voice, and generally speaks in a dogmatic, dictatorial way that admits of no contradiction.

Coleridge delivered his philosophic utterances in an uninteresting monotone that late in life became an almost unintelligible mumble.

Frederick the Great had a sneering, disagreeable voice that corresponded well to the cynical utterances he was in the habit of making.

Goldsmith had a singing voice of great purity, and it was a treat to hear him render an old Irish air, which he did in inimitable style.

Alcoholism in France.

Among thinking people in France the evils of alcoholism are attracting a great deal of attention, and only recently the Academy of Medicine, the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences and the Superior Council of the Public Assistance held a meeting at which the whole subject was gone over very carefully. In the summing-up it was found that absinthe is doing just about as much harm as are distilled liquors. Thus, one physician reported that in his practice he had found that out of twenty patients, ten were suffering from alcoholism, and that wine and ordinary distilled liquors were responsible for five of these, while absinthe was the cause of the other five. From 1885 to 1892 the amount of absinthe and similar drinks coming under the observation of the excise and other officers of Paris had more than doubled, and each year showed a greater yearly increase. In view of this state of things, the doctors make the following recommendations to the State:—First, to reduce the number of liquor shops. Second, to make as low as possible all taxes on beer and cider, while exercising a supervision over the quality of those drinks. Third, to tax wine moderately, and to take measures against its harmful adulteration. Fourth, to increase the tax on spirituous liquors, and to allow in commercial policy only that which is hygenically pure. Fifth, to prohibit absinthe and similar bitters in which the essential oils exercise a pernicious influence on the human organism. The facts mentioned constitute a sharp indictment of the present condition of France. Certainly the French will not be equal to whipping the English and Germans, when the talked-of war comes, unless some reform on the drink question takes place.—Buffalo Express.

Men's Dress.

The London Lancet finds the question of rational dress for men one that is almost as much worth inquiring into as that of the same for women. "Men," says that journal, "have for ages scoffed at women for the vagaries and flights of fancy displayed in their dress, but there is really little to choose between the sexes except in the great matter of the pocket, for, except a professional thief, no mortal being, even the owner, can get at a woman's pocket."

Some of the evils of men's dress are then pointed out, notably the exposure of the lungs, the most susceptible to injury from cold of any organ of the body. The animal creation is cited to show that nature left to herself takes care of this delicate organ, the polar bear having its thick coating of fur, the whale its blubber, and birds their coating of feathers, with warm underdown—only man showing a foolish disregard for the needs for protection. The fashionable waistcoat is by no means suitable wear. Bad as is man's day dress, however, it is when he gets into his evening clothes that he betrays the greatest want of sense and forethought. "During the day, when he is going about, he wears thick woollen clothes, with stout boots and warm socks. At night he puts on very thin clothes, a waistcoat which is of no protective value whatever, very thin shoes, possibly silk stockings, relinquishes his gaiters, and goes out in the open air thus insufficiently protected on his way to theatre, dinner or ball, congratulating himself," says the Lancet, "that he is not as those poor silly women, who go about with the upper part of their chests bare."—New York Times.

An Interesting Bandit.

Manuel Garcia was a curious character," said a Cuban gentleman in speaking of the reported death of that revolutionist. "He was more like a character in a novel than a man living in the nineteenth century. His home was the mountains, and he led a regular bandit's life, every now and then holding up Spandiards on the road or carrying off one of them and holding him for ransom. He would write to a Spanish planter, 'Send me $5,000 or I shall burn your house,' and if the money was not forthcoming he wauld carry his threat into execution. He would even write to Government officials, signing himself 'King of the Mountains,' and demanding tribute. He never preyed on the native Cubans, only on the Spaniards, and gave most of his money to the revolutionary party to purchase arms."

20 YEARS OF SUFFERING.

20 Failures to Cure

For 20 years I suffered the torments of the damned with blind and itching piles. Had I known of any cure I would not have hesitated to have given hundreds of dollars to obtain it. I followed the instructions of an eminent physician in using syringe treatments. I used Fowler's Pile Cure and 20 others of different kinds. From some a little relief was gained, but nothing approached a cure. I was about resigned to the fate of having to pass through an almost uninterrupted course of suffering so long as I lived, when Chase's Ointment was brought to my notice. The statements in regard to it were so strong and bore with them a sense of conviction sufficient to overcome my skepticism in regard to its being no better than the rest. I used it, with the result of receiving immediate relief and permanent cure. For weeks and weeks I was fearfully afraid of a return to misery, but it did not occur. I started using Chase's Ointment, hoping for relief and realized a cure that is permanent. I do not believe there ever was a worse case of blind and itching piles than mine, which leads me to think there is not a case to be recorded that Chase's Ointment will not cure.

Yours truly,

He Got Damages.—J. T. Bulmer, a Halifax lawyer, has just recovered damages against seven members of the police force of that city for forcibly ejecting him from the police court during the progress of a trial. The affair took place in June last. Bulmer and a witness were having a heated argument causing considerable uproar, when the police interfered and ejected him on the order of the presiding Magistrate. Bulmer subsequently returned to the courtroom and was promptly ejected and placed in the lockup, this time without the Magistrate's order. It is for their conduct the second time that damages were given against the police.

THE KENT CASE.

Phsicians Universally Admit the Diagnosis to have been Correct.

Ottawa, April 22—The diagnosis in the case of Mr. G. H. Kent, of this city, whose recovery from Bright's disease by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills has been so extensively chronicled appears to have been a very correct one. The swelling of the body and extremities to an abnoral size the fearful convulsions and subsequent insensibility, the racking pains, the formation of the hard ridges across the pit of the stomach and the great loss of albumen are all symptoms of this terrible disease, and it is universally admitted by all who have been approached on the subject that the case was unmistakable in its character. It is also universally admitted that he owes his restored health to the above mentioned remedy.

Predicted Eight Deaths.—A strange story comes from Laurel, Delaware. Chas. Fooks, son of Daniel Fooks, Laurel's wealthiest citizen, died on Sunday last. Three months ago Edward Taylor, an aged citizen, was laughed at for telling a strange dream, foretelling of the death of eight well known citizens, and that the ensuing year would record the deaths of an unusually large number of them. A few days later he said that he worried over the return of the dream, and that the four first that were to die would be the wealthiest citizens of the county. They were Benjamin Fooks, Gov. Marvil, William Dashiells and Daniel Fooks. The three first named are dead. The eldest son of the last named and two others named in Taylor's vision, are ill.

Heart Disease Relieved in 30 Minutes.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart gives perfect relief in all cases of Organic or Sympathetic Heart Disease in 30 minutes, and speedily effects a cure. It is a peerless remedy for Palpitation, Shortness of Breath, Smothering Spells, Pain in Left Side and all symptoms of a Diseased Heart. One dose convinces. Sold by S. W. Dodd.

If too rapid eating causes dyspepsia, and it in its turn produces nervous exhaustion, debility, weakness, anaemia, etc., the first step in effecting a cure is to eat slowly. The second and most important is to take a course of Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic, which aids the process of digestion, invigorates the stomach, renews the vitality of the blood, relieves brain fatigue, and makes weak nerves strong. ......

"Really, Mr. Stalate," she persisted, "you have given me four hours of your time this evening."

Get the Best.

The public are too intelligent to purchase a worthless article a second time. On the contrary they want the best! Physicians are unanimous in saying Scott's Emulsion is the best form of Cod Liver Oil.

Relief in Six Hours.—Distressing Kidney and Bladder diseases relieved in six hours by the "Great South American Kidney Cure." This new remedy is a great surprise and delight on account of its exceeding promptness in relieving pain in the bladder, kidneys, back and every part of the urinary passages in male or female. It relieves retention of water and pain in passing it almost immediately. If you want quick relief and cure this is your remedy.
