

Entomologists To Discuss Control Of Orchard Pests

By ALAN DONNELLY
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP)—Since the war science has provided fruit-growers with a wide array of new insecticides. They kill orchard pests faster and better than ever before.

Yet some agricultural scientists are wondering whether it is all worthwhile. Use of the new chemicals has been accompanied by outbreaks of insects which never before caused serious worry.

The codling moth, for instance, is one of the worst apple pests. The worm you find in apples is usually a codling moth larva.

MITES UNHARMED
DDT, developed in wartime, proved excellent for killing codling moths. Yet its use brought an upsurge of mites—one of the most spectacular fruit pest problems of recent years. The DDT was killing predators which had kept the mites in check. The mites themselves, however, were not harmed by the insecticide.

Several poisons which control mites now are available. But the problem caused by insecticides upsetting the balance of nature continues.

Dr. A. P. Arnason, head of fruit insect entomology in the agricultural department, said in a recent interview that scientists have been continuously seeking new insecticides which have wider and wider effect, so as to reduce the number of sprays needed.

"But every time an advance is made, they find it brings an increase in some other pest."

Importance of controlling insects is seen in the amount of damage they do. Dr. Arnason estimated in a recent report that 10 per cent of the crop and said they would be even higher without present controls.

SPRAYING COSTLY
Fruit growers, to do an effective insecticide job, had to spray orchards about once every week or 10 days from budding time to harvest, using half-a-dozen types of sprays.

He said the cost of a single spraying for a 40-acre orchard of 2,000 trees is perhaps $80-$100, plus the work of two men for a week.

One answer to the insect problem has been presented by A. D. Pickett, a federal entomologist at Kentville, N. S. His thesis: let natural controls such as insect parasites and predators do the job whenever possible.

Mr. Pickett will present his findings at the 10th International Congress of Entomology to be held in Montreal next August.

In a recent scientific report, Mr. Pickett said his research began in 1943 because he feared that indiscriminate spraying was sometimes causing worse problems than it corrected.

He found the use of sulphur to kill fungus diseases was the main cause of a big increase in oyster-shell scale which killed many apple trees between 1933 and 1945. When sulphur was replaced by a fungicide which didn't harm natural enemies of the scale, the scale was brought under control.

KILLS MOTHS' ENEMIES
DDT, besides hitting predators of moths, also was killing many natural enemies of the codling moth and other pests. This resulted in outbreaks of insects which had not caused trouble before.

For example, the eye-spotted bud moth "occurs in outbreak numbers only in sprayed orchards," he wrote.

Mr. Pickett's report, in 1951, said five test orchards near Kentville had gone without codling moth spray for periods ranging from four to 13 years. Fruit damage had never been above 20 per cent and generally was between five and 15 per cent. The report added: "We believe the fruit grower should concede the codling moth 20 per cent of his crop rather than engage in a DDT or extensive lead arsenate control program with all of the attendant problems of increased mites and insects, spray residues, reduced foliage efficiency, lowered fruit quality, hazards to personnel and other possible complications."

But farmers who stop using insecticides will have to pay a price, he added. They couldn't expect to find their orchards full of parasites and predators after they had been eliminated by sprays. It might take two or three years for these natural controls to take over.

USE OF RYANIA
Part of Mr. Pickett's program now involves use of ryania, a vegetable-based poison which is sprayed for codling moths only in years when it appears natural parasites won't control them. Ryania doesn't affect the natural enemies of most insects.

DDT was discovered in the 1880s by a German scientist named Ziegler. Not until 1939 was its value as an insecticide discovered, in Switzerland. In 1942 it was introduced in the United States, where all-out DDT production has begun solely for military use.

DDT has since led to the development of many other organic insecticides—fortunately, because some insects have grown resistant to DDT.

Now there is an effective poison for nearly every harmful fruit insect, Dr. Arnason said.

But their effect on beneficial insects had prompted a special study of the relationship of insecticides to insect abundance. Its goal was to reduce the use of chemicals to a minimum and utilize "selective" fungicides and insecticides which would not upset the balance of nature.

Canada Not Considering Palestine Police Force

By DAVE MCINTOSH
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP)—It would be practically impossible for Canada alone to supply the type of police force sought for Palestine, informants say.

Enlargement of the United Nations truce supervisory organization in Palestine would require a good many staff officers and Canada simply hasn't got them to spare.

Posting of Canadian staff officers to the Indochina truce commission in 1954 cut big gaps in the army establishment. The army said at the time it could ill afford the loss—some 150 men.

But a Palestine force would require hundreds of men. Trained, experienced officers are needed for such a job, not an ordinary army battalion or the like.

Prime Minister St. Laurent Monday told the Commons that the government is giving no consideration to sending a 500-man force to Palestine.

He was questioned about published reports to this effect or that the subject would come up during Prime Minister Eden's current visit here. John Diefenbaker (P.C.—Prince Albert), the questioner, mentioned the possibility of transferring some Canadian troops now in West Germany.

"No," Mr. St. Laurent said, "there has been no request to Canada for a force of that character, and naturally no consideration has been given in view of the fact that no such request has made."

Sir Anthony said Monday in an address to the Canadian Parliament that Britain and the United States are "very ready" to agree to a strengthening of the UN truce team in Palestine under Major-Gen. E.L.M. Burns of Ottawa.

"But of course we would wish to be guided by Gen. Burns," he added.

Railway Employee Honored By Friends

When Daniel D. Birt, Section foreman at Mt. Stewart retired recently after serving the railway faithfully and well for thirty-eight years it was a real milestone of his career. 70-day he looks backward with pride upon a job well done and forward with a keen anticipation to the enjoyment he will have from the fruits of his labours.

Mr. Birt first entered the railway service as a coal trimmer on the S.S. Prince of Wales Island, served for a period in the Canadian Navy during World War I and on discharge resumed his duties on the Prince Edward where he remained until he transferred to the section branch of the railway in 1920.

During the years Mr. Birt has built up a veritable army of friends who respect him not alone for his untiring efforts as a public servant but also for those marked traits of character which has stamped him as an outstanding citizen of the community.

Proof of the high esteem in which he is held by his fellow workmen was the gathering of some fifty railway employees at his home to show in a more tangible way their appreciation of the genial Dan and his amiable partner, the former Miss Eva Laird of Pisquid. After the popular couple recovered their prize Mr. Lloyd Nicholson, assistant Road Master, acting as master of ceremonies called upon Mr. Athol Ellis, Station Agent at Mt. Stewart to read an address befitting the occasion while presentations were made to both Mr. and Mrs. Birt by Mr. Nicholson and Mrs. Ward Jay. Among those present who spoke in glowing terms of Mr. Birt's splendid service and admirable qualities as a citizen were Mr. A. E. Lavers C.N.R. Road Master, Eastern Division, and Mr. Alphonse MacPhee, retired section foreman of Cardigan.

The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing and singing to the music of Mr. Jack Webster, Cardigan, and Mr. Roland Jay, Mt. Stewart. A delicious lunch was served to all.

The following is the address: Dear Dan; It is with mingled feelings of rejoicing and regret that we, your
