FLORABEL'S LOVER

Every step that brought her nearer convinced her that it was Max's young wife. Another moment and she was beside her. In a hoarse voice she called her name, laying her hand heavily on the girl's arm.

Florabel raised her eyes with a gasp, then drew back in startled terror.

"Miss Clavering!" she murmured. For an instant they gazed transfixed into each other's faces, a terrible silence ensuing.

Through Inez's mind a thousand thoughts had passed with the rapidity of lightning. Surely the pure, angelic face before her could never have belonged to a guilty creature.

A daring plan came to Inez's wily, cunning brain in a single instant. She would pretend a friendship for Florabel, which was exactly opposite to the bitter hatred that was raging in her heart; for Florabel was, if possible, more beautiful than ever. One could do so much more under the guise of friendship.

"Florabel," she repeated, softly. "Do my eyes deceive me, or is this really you?"

Tears sprang to the lovely hazel eyes, that were raised so childishly to hers; the red lips quivered.

"Why did you go away in that manner, Florabel?" said Miss Clavering, in a low voice. "Tell me all, dear; make me your confidante; tell me all. You have always taken me for your enemy, Florabel, but, in truth, I am your friend. Oh, how I grieved over you!"

Florabel was young and simple. She knew so little of the world no wonder she was deceived—that no thought of treachery occurred to her. "You have grieved for me?" Florabel repeated, in the greatest wonder.

"Why, I thought you hated me, Miss Clavering, I did, indeed, and I thought you and—Max's mother would be so pleased to be rid of me."

"But why did you go?" persisted Inez, drawing her to a seat and seating herself beside her. "Tell me all about it, Florabel," she urged.

When Inez Clavering chose, she could make herself quite as irresistible to women as to men.

"Perhaps I was a little cross to you in those other days, Florabel," she said, sweetly; "and, oh, how I have repented it. I would give the whole world to be the means of bringing you back to happiness, dear little Florabel."

"Oh, Inez, how I have misjudged you," sobbed Florabel, flinging her white arms about her false friend with all the abandon of a grieving child. "I thought you would rejoice because Max and I—had separated—"

A TORONTO LADY CURED OF ASTHMA

After Twelve Years' Suffering. Toronto Physicians Advised Leaving Her Home to Go to Manitoba. Clarke's Kola Compound Cured.

Mrs. McTaggart, 80 Vanalee street, Toronto, writes:—"I have been troubled with asthma and bronchitis for twelve years, which gradually grew worse each year, in spite of the hundreds of dollars my husband has spent with several doctors, and almost every remedy we could procure. For the past two years I could not lie on my left side, and during the past year previous to taking Clarke's Kola Compound the asthma became so severe that I had not had a full night's sleep, and during most of that time we had a doctor in attendance. We gave up several doctors, as I was becoming no better, and the last doctor, after about two months' treatment, told me he could do nothing for me, and advised me to go to Manitoba or some dry climate. We heard of Clarke's Kola Compound being a cure for asthma, and before taking this remedy made several enquiries from those who had taken it, and in each case found the result so satisfactory that we resolved to try it. After taking the first bottle I became much better, and began to sleep well at nights. Since taking the third bottle I have not felt the slightest symptoms of my former trouble. I have during the past six months gained nearly 20 pounds in flesh, and feel perfectly healthy in every way. I can assure you that I will do all in my power to induce any sufferer from this terrible disease to try it."

Clarke's Kola Compound is sold by druggists, or by the Griffiths and Macpherson Co., Limited, 121 Church street, Toronto.

for good, and because—oh, how can I ever tell you what else I thought?"

"You must tell me, Florabel," said Inez, smoothly.

"I was foolish enough to think you cared for Max, and that, if I was out of the way, you would marry him."

Inez laughed with forced gaiety. "You must tell me all," repeated Inez; "and then I can judge which is to blame in this bitter quarrel; you or Max."

"I will see you to-morrow and tell you," responded Florabel, telling her of Miss Carlisle's death, of her acquaintance with the heiress, and how it was brought about.

"I shall be needed at the house now," she continued; "but to-morrow the house will be closed, and I shall have to go away; and I—I have not thought yet where I will go."

"We will talk that over to-morrow," said Inez; "and also how a reconciliation could be effected between Max and yourself. You would like that?"

"Above everything else in the world," sighed Florabel. "I have a special and earnest reason now," she confessed, timidly, the great tear drops starting to her eyes as she clasped her little hands and looked piteously up into Inez Clavering's face.

"If any one can effect that reconciliation, I can," declared Inez. "Trust everything implicitly to me, Florabel."

"Thank God, in my coming time of need I will have a friend," sobbed Florabel, gratefully. "Heaven will reward you, Inez, for all you do for me, I am sure."

With these words they parted, Florabel to hurry onward in the direction of the heiress' darkened home, and Inez to wend her way slowly in the direction of the Forrester mansion.

"The little fool!" she muttered, under her breath. "Does she think I could endure to see her and Max reconciled to each other? I would do anything in my power to keep them asunder. In time he will learn to forget her, and then my great love must win him. In the golden future I will be Mrs. Max Forrester—not you, my pretty, baby-faced Florabel."

"Ah! if she were only out of New York city. They are liable to meet any day here, and then, as once before, my rosy dreams would lay shantered in ruins about me. No, no, my unsuspecting little Florabel, I will make it the business of my life to keep you and Max apart."

"Let him search the world over to find you—it will be useless—worse than useless. I will spirit you out of his reach."

"The strait my family is in means utter ruin in a few short months. I must make the most of my lengthy visit to the Forresters; for when the crash comes in papa's business the doors of fashionable society will be closed against me."

"Now is my only chance, and I care for Max."

All night long Inez Clavering paced the floor of her room in the greatest agitation, planning as diabolical plot as ever entered a woman's brain.

She was at the trying-place early to meet Florabel. Her victim came at last, and Inez greeted her with a kiss.

Although eagerly pressed to confide to Inez the exact nature of her quarrel with Max, Florabel steadily refused.

It was quite a revelation to Inez to hear that Max had left her in bitter anger, vowing he was going away, and vowing that he should never look upon her face again, and that she had gone quietly away, believing that she would be more than unwelcome in Mrs. Forrester's home after Max had left her.

Inez never told her that Max returned, and finding her gone, and her letter there, was under the impression she had eloped.

It would surely have broken poor, hapless Florabel's heart if she had known that.

"You say Max's mother expected him to-day?" said Florabel, with pitiful eagerness. "Did my—my—did he come, Miss Clavering?"

"Prepare yourself for a little disappointment, Florabel," said Inez. "He did not come; but we received a letter from him, and he said he might not return for three months; but his business often takes him on flying trips to Boston. Do not sob so dejectedly, pretty Florabel. You shall go to Boston, and there you will see him before many days.

"Now, my plan is for you to go there and board in some quiet place for a few weeks. If you have not the money, I will loan it to you. I will write a letter to him, telling him you are there, and he will come on at once, I truly believe."

"Oh, dearest Inez, how good of you to think and plan for me!" sobbed Florabel. "I could kneel at your feet and worship you. How could I ever have doubted your friendship?"

A strange smile played about Inez's crimson lips.

It was a great relief to Inez Clavering when the train moved out of the depot, bearing poor Florabel with it, her pretty, tear-stained face pressed close against the pane as she waved Inez farewell.

"She is out of his way," muttered Inez. "Now I shall not be in deadly fear each day lest they meet."

That same afternoon Max Forrester reached New York city, as Inez knew he would.

A Frenchman Finds Canadian Weather Had a Bad Effect on His Health

St. ESTACHE, Que., Feb. 12.—Auguste Dubois landed here from France, a perfect stranger to the weather conditions prevailing in this country. The food also differed from that to which he had been accustomed, and his heart being weak, the change had a serious effect upon it. He went to a medical man who did him no good. He went to others with a similar result in each case.

"I had to go to Montreal," he says, "to work for the Grand Trunk in that city and met a man who was suffering the same as myself, but had started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. He told me they were doing him good. He was kind enough to give me a few of them. I took them. I felt much better. I procured a box, and fifteen days felt like a different man."

It is said that one of Chicago's big department stores will presently add codlins and tombstones to its stock.

Are You Bilious?

A sluggish liver fails to filter the bile from the blood, and when the poisonous matter goes through the body in the circulation, the whole system is tainted and deranged. This is called biliousness and can be completely cured by Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which act directly on the liver making it healthy and active. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box. The cheapest medicine in the world.

Don't Tear Down—Build Up.

The old-fashioned theory of tearing down disease was entirely changed by the advent of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, which cures by creating new rich blood and nerve tissue. Through the medium of the circulation and the nervous system they strengthen and invigorate every organ in the human body.

Optimist—The days are beginning to get longer now. Pessimist—I don't know; my notes come due as fast as ever.

To Cure a Cold in One Day

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box.
