Two amendments to the association's constitution suggested in a report tabled by the chairman of the committee in charge, Calvin C. Wood, were both defeated.

One would have limited the number of provincial vice-presidents to three, one for each county, while the other would have added a representative-at-large to the board of directors.

CLOSE TO 100
Close to 100 accredited delegates were reported by Carl MacKenna of Charlottetown, chairman of the credentials committee.

Premier Shaw, who arrived while the meeting was in progress, welcomed the delegates and expressed his "very vigorous appreciation" of the service given the party by the YPC's.

The manner in which the association conducted its business pointed up the privilege of democracy which permitted all to speak and vote freely on each and every issue, he said.

Mr. Shaw stated that he and his colleagues in the provincial government had been examining carefully this past few weeks both the process of government and various issues that had arisen therefrom.

COMPLETE PICTURE
The Premier expressed the hope that the external audit now going on would be completed before the next session of the legislature was called.

"By that time," he said, "we shall have the complete picture and be in a position to inform the electorate just what the previous government had accomplished."
