Opening lead — king of diamonds.

A defender must keep a sharp lookout at all times if he expects to get satisfactory results. Much more imagination is required of the defenders, who do not know each other's cards, than there is of the declarer, who sees all his side's cards before him.

West led the king of diamonds and East had much to think about. The problem was to find the best chance of taking four tricks against the four spade contract. West was marked by the opening lead with the queen of diamonds, but because it was obvious that South's values were largely distributional, there was no assurance that two diamond tricks could be won.

There was also a danger that the ace of clubs would never score because declarer might be void. After considering the matter fully, East decided the best hope of beating the contract was to play declarer for a doubleton diamond, and on that basis he overtook the king with the ace and returned his singleton jack of hearts.

East's plan was to get a heart ruff, after he got in with the ace of spades, by putting West in the lead with the queen of diamonds for a heart return.

It was a well-conceived idea, and the overtake of the diamond king with the ace, followed by the jack of hearts return, left no doubt about the purpose of the play.

The plan would have worked all right except that declarer, alerted to the danger, found a countermeasure to prevent defeat. He took the heart in dummy with the queen and led the king of clubs.

East played the ace, but South, instead of ruffing it, deposited a diamond on the trick. There was now no way for West to obtain the lead to give East a heart ruff.

Declarer ruffed the diamond which East led, played the jack of spades, and finessed against the queen. East took the ace—the third ace he had scoored—and was out of business.

The hand was well played by both sides.
