Holiday Dunking Tree Incredible Yet Edible

"REFRESHMENTS that can also be decorative! What a good idea, Madame," exclaimed the Chef.

"My newest idea has gone way beyond the imaginative stage," I said. "Just open the refrigerator door, and you'll see the evidence — a Holiday Dunking Tree ready to enjoy after tonight's game of bridge."

Carefully, the Chef set the colorful "tree" on the table. "How beautiful, Madame! This hollowed out pineapple holds the dip. Picks impale the colorful vegetable dunks in place in wreathlike formation on the pineapply. And on the tuft of leaves on the pineapple top, you hung tiny gay Christmas tree decorations. Mes compliments!"

Here's the Dunking Tree in recipe form, a holiday goodie with eye and taste-appeal.

Measurements are level

HOLIDAY DUNKING TREE DE LUXE

Trio of Special Dips

1. 1 c. cream, whipped
½ c. mayonnaise
½ packet dried leek soup mix
1 (4½ oz.) can deviled ham

2. 1c. sour cream
½ packet dried leek soup mix
1 (4½ oz.) can deviled ham

3. 1 c. sour cream
½ packet dry Italian dressing mix
1 (4½ oz.) can deviled ham

For each of the DIPS: Combine ingredients; mix throughly and refrigerate an hour or more before serving. Serves 20 to 30.

THE DUNKS: Broccoli, cauliflower, cucumber chunks, cherry tomatoes, radishes.

A Pineapple Holder for Each Dip

To Make: Cut top from fresh pineapple; remove most of pulp; line the hollow with foil and fill with chosen dip. Attach vegetables to out side of pineapple with picks to made red, white and green "garlands." Decorate pineapple top with tiny Christmas tree ornaments. Replace and pass at once.

Argyle Shore WI Supports Welfare Work

Mrs. Morris MacDougall was hostess for the December meeting of Argyle Shore WI. The meeting was chaired by president, Mrs. D. Pollard, and ten members answered roll call with an exchange of gifts which were arranged under the tree.

MARY HAWORTH

Infantile Personality Burdens Girl In Quest

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For two years I have been dating Tom (now 20 and a junior in college), on a basis of once every other week or so.

He is very intelligent and has several more years' schooling ahead. He is nice looking, with excellent character and upbringing.

I have liked him from the first; in fact, and probably love him,as much as he will let me. He has admitted that he doesn't love me, though he says he is happy just to be with me.

There has been no discernible change in our relationship since we started dating. He never goes out of his way to see me or call me more often, though he knows of my unhappiness about this. He has encouraged me to date others, which I do; and so does he.

If only he would let me know, in some definite fashion, what exactly I do mean to him;

Superficial is the word for our relationship, I guess. He never speaks to me seriously unless I am processing some instance of his neglect. He doesn't confide in me, nor do we discuss his problems or mine.

I can see why he might be wary of getting serious, but is that a sound reason for showing no feeling? (I am sure he considers me his equal).

I am haunted by the thought, that this is a one-way love; that he is indifferent to the whole affair and intends to keep it on this basis until the right girl for him comes along.

As time goes on I feel more hurt. Since he is away at college, his letters are just about as impersonal as if he'd met me two dates ago. I think the worst part is that he knows I am unhappy, yet he insists he can't change; or if he tries, it lasts only a few weeks.

Though I am constantly troubled and know I should do something about it, I can't bring myself to break off as I would only be more unhappy. I'll never find another with all his good qualities. I need your advice, immediately. F.S.

D E A R F.S.: As I get the picture, you are burdened by a markedly infantile personality in your quest for true romance and satisfactory mate love.

Ted is a foggier figure in the landscape of your letter. As he hasn't spoken for himself in this instance (you've painted him in, as you see him his psychology - of - dating, in relation to you, is more difficult to fathom.

However, the gist of your complaint indicates that he lacks confidence in himself as a male, despite his good qualities. Maybe he's been overdominated by a vampirish mom - mother who henpecks his dad; or maybe his dad is a harsh domineering character, whom a sensitive son would shrink from resembling.

In any case, whatever Ted's background, the lad who is innately dubious and uncertain about his worth, in the "man amongst men" category, is seldom if ever a positive, declarative, keenly competitive or ardently responsive courtier, simple because, unconsciously, he shrinks from the shadowy possibility of ridicule, rejection, humiliation and public failure if he were to put his loverlike hopes (if any) to the test with full candor.

Note I have said: "his loverlike hopes (if any)." I say that advisedly, because the fact is, persons who suffer from deeply ingrained, even though unjustified, self doubts about their love-worthiness (or sex attractiveness and competence), seldom if ever allow themselves to consciously feel, much less act upon, powerful sentiments of wholesome hunger to love and be loved by others.

I surmise that something of the sort probably stymies Ted in relation to all girls, until now. Probably that's why he has settled into a lackluster dating routine with you, namely: because you are easy to be around offering no threat to his inner anxieties.

It seems you are a mixture of helplessness and passivity, waiting for your dreams to materialize, or for someone to deliver happiness into your hands, instead of assuming maturing personal responsibility for shaping your life towards goals desired. It seems also that you plainly adore Ted, in a mournful, unenticing, semi - proprietary sort of way, which probably soothes his self - doubts somewhat.

As for advice: grow up! First-hand psychological counselling could give you a boost in that direction. When and if you no longer lean wanly towards Ted — as the be-all and end-all of your reason - for - living — He may begin to develop an edge of really appreciative love - interest in you. M. H.

No Wendy In Whole World Over Age 60, Legend Says

By DOUG MARSHALL

LONDON (CP)—Nowhere in the world, so she legend goes, is there a woman over the age of 60 called Wendy.

All the Wendys anywhere are named after the girl whisked away to Never-Never Land by the immortal Peter Pan in Sir James Barrie's whimsical play for children.

This is the Diamond Jubilee season of Peter Pan. It was first produced in London's Duke of York Theatre in 1904, only a few months after Barrie, ninth son of a Scottish weaver, first wrote it out in longhand. He was then in his early 40s.

Since then the story of Peter — the little boy who never grew up—and his adventures with Wendy, Tinker Bell, Captain Hook and the clock-work crocodile have become a Christmas institution on the London stage.

Except for two years at the beginning of the Second World War, there has been an annual production of the play in the West End. In 1962 it was even mounted on ice.

THEY BELIEVE

Generations of children have perched on the edge of their seats ready to scream "yes" when Peter Gravely steps to the footlights and asks the audience whether they believe in fairies. Without their annual response Tinker Bell would die.

Barrie, a shy, pipe-smoking man, had no children of his own. But he knew a little girl called Margaret Henley who was devoted to him.

The legend is that Margaret once tried to say "friendly" and could only lisp "Fwendy." The slip gave Barrie the inspiration for the name Wendy.

The original inspiration for Peter Pan was 10 - year - old Peter Davies, son of a friend of Barrie's whom he met one day in 1902 playing in Kensington Gardens. A statue of Peter Pan, original of those in St. John's, Nfld., and Toronto, now stands on the banks of the Serpentine near the spot where the playwright and the boy met.

Barrie later made young Davies one of his wards and left him £3,000 when he died in 1937 at the age of 77. Davies, who grew up to be a publisher, died tragically in 1960 when he fell under a subway train in London

WOMEN PLAY PETER

Over the years some of British most famous actresses have been literally launched—by suspension wires—onto the stage in the role of Peter. They include Fay Compton, Elsa Lanchester, Gladys Cooper, Anna Neagle, Glynis Johns, Margaret Lockwood and her daughter, Julia, Sarah Churchill and Vivien Leigh.

Famous Captain Hooks include Charles Laughton, Boris Karloff, Sir Ralph Richardson and Stanley Holloway.

When Barrie died he left the royalties of the play to London's Great Ormond Street Hospital for Sick Children. The money from Peter Pan built a £350,000 James Barrie wing for the hospital. The wing has an x-ray department, a dental department and a 36-bed heart ward equipped with the most modern appliances for heart treatment in the world.

The hospital trustees hope to authorize a feature film of Peter Pan but now are involved in a legal suit with Walt Disney, who made a cartoon film of the legend in the 1950s.

If the hospital wins its case the film will star Audrey Hepburn as Peter and will be directed by George Cukor of My Fair Lady fame. It will also involve the most illustrious Captain Hook of all—Sir Laurence Olivier.

Reds Ready For Peace In Viet Nam

The Vietnamese Communists are ready to talk peace" in South Viet Nam—but on their terms. That, in the long run, would mean the south would eventually become Communist and years of costly U.S. effort would be annulled.

Obviously jubilant over recurring political crisis in Saigon successful bold attacks and terrorism, the Communist regime in North Viet Nam gives the impression in its propaganda it sees events rushing toward a climax. The Communists speak as if victory already were within their grasp—just a matter of time.

If they talk peace, the Communists now indicate, it will not be under the auspices of any broad international convocation. The slogan is: "The people of Viet Nam will settle their own affairs between themselves."

Pope Planning Western Visits

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope Paul is reported to be considering a visit to the Dominican Republic and perhaps other areas of the western hemisphere.

The other areas were not specified, but a Dominican diplomatic envoy noted here that the United States and Brazil are geographically well situated for a papal stopover should he go to the Dominican Republic.

DISCREETLY DRAMATIC

Penthouse peignoir of opaque white nylon tricot and black velvet is so discreetly dramatic it could double as a hostess gown in a split level. It was designed by Claire Haddad of Toronto, with an embroidered black polka dot skirt floating over an empire-waisted gown. The gown's V-neck bodice repeats the black and white theme.

Anti-Cancer Drug Okayed For U.S. Use

NEW YORK (AP) — Merck and Company, said here it has received federal approval to market an anti-cancer drug to hospitals.

The drug is reported to have been found useful against a rare type of kidney cancer whose victims mostly are children.

By noon, Merck had risen $4 a share to $51 on the New York Stock Exchange. The company is one of the biggest drug and chemical producers in the U.S.

The drug, an antibiotic named "actino-mycin "D" has long been used in cancer research.

HEADS RELIEF FUND

WINNIPEG (CP)—Grain executive Cecil Lamont of Winnipeg has been elected president of the Canadian Disaster Relief Fund, it was announced here Saturday. He replaces H. W. Manning of Winnipeg, who retired in November, in the first presidential change since the fund was incorporated in 1953.

Shower Held At Montague

An enjoyable gathering took place recently in Lower Montague hall, when friends and neighbors met to honor Mr. and Mrs. Roland Musick (nee Mary Hewitt) with a miscellaneous shower. Gifts were opened by Mrs. Gloria Richards and Mrs. Sandra Hewitt. Mrs. June Hicken read the verses.

The evening was spent in dancing with music furnished by Joe Kearney and Gerard Murphy. Refreshments were served.
