Latin American Relations With U.S. May Be Changing

By WILLIAM L. RYAN

LIMA (AP)—The crisis in the Dominican Republic may prove to have been the agent of revolutionary change in the relations of Latin American countries with the United States.

The crisis can mean painful difficulties ahead for U.S. diplomacy. Yet, in the long run, it could mean a change for the better.

Latin American politicians obviously have noted that in cases where governments — such as the one in Peru—openly deplored U.S. military action in the Dominican Republic, they tended to pull some of the teeth of the extreme left, depriving it of an important tool of propaganda attack.

On the other hand, where a government, such as that of Columbia, did not denounce U.S. action unequivocally, the extremists were provided with more propaganda ammunition with which to support new violence.

OBSERVE CLOSELY

It seems likely that Latin American governments will carefully observe the experience of Peru and Venezuela, both constitutionally elected regimes which publicly took a sour view of U.S. action in the Dominican capital.

Peru is a good example of what seems to be developing. There seemed in the country to have been an intial feeling of shock at the original landings of U.S. forces in Santo Domingo.

The U.S. troops nailed down a security zone in Santo Domingo and sealed off a rebellion which Washington suspected of pro-Cuban Communist leanings.

Extremists elsewhere tried to capitalize on the action. In Peru there were some minor demonstrations. But any attempt to direct these against the government of President Fernando Belaunde Terry would have been frustrated, largely because of the attitude of the government itself. It not only criticized the U.S. action but refused to participate in an international military force under th eOrganization of American States.

Thereafter, attempts of Cuban Communist elements to mount demonstrations seemed to lack steam. Even an outbreak of stoning at the U.S. embassy building was a passing incident, staged by two dozen demonstrators who failed to rally any public support.

SHOCK WEARS OFF

Gradually, the shock of the Dominican crisis has begun to wear away here. Gradually, arguments on the U.S. side have begun to find their way into influential organs of the press.

While there has been a waning emphasis on the Dominican crisis as a whole, denunciations have continued.

Most violent of these have come from the Apra party of Victor Raul Haya de la Torre, which proclaims itself militantly anti-Communist and to which the United States has looked hopefully in the past as a leftist safety valve to offset extremist pressures and offer a peaceful alternative to the left in general.

Apra, which failed to win the presidency in the elections 1963, has an unlikely alliance with the followers of the former dictator, retired Gen. Manuel A. Odria, and holds a balance of power in congress. But there is a sort of give-and-take between the president and congress which permits Peru to move at a fairly respectable pace toward curing some of her ancient political and economic ills. Despite all the ferment going on elsewhere, Peru is relatively tranquil politically.

Extra-Marital Sex Relations Are Discussed

TORONTO (CP)—Extra-marital sexual relations can sometimes be tolerated if they are motivated by love, says a United Church of Canada official.

Rev. J. M. Dickinson, director of pastroal counselling services, was discussing the New Morality at a church lecture group here.

The New Morality, he said, stresses a life in a freer society in which one tries to understand the motives behind a man's action rather than condemn the action alone.

"Many extra-marital love affairs must be more graceful in the eyes of God compared to the sometimes sterile, beastly and destructive sex manifestations within the marriage," said Mr. Dickinson.

Homosexuality, long regarded as one of the grossest of evils, for similar reasons should not be condemned, he said.

CITES GENUINE LOVE

"One enters every situation in life asking, not so much what does the moral law require of me or what is right and wrong, but rather what does genuine love for the other person require of me," he said.

This type of thinking marked the end of any kind of moralism based on the authority of church scriptures, he said.

From the point of view of the new morality, one tries to understand what effect a man's action has had on him and what it has meant to him, Mr. Dickinson said.

In this case, there were "good and evil dimensions" to every individual action.

But people should feel released from "this ridiculous command to be a good little boy and God will love you."

There has been a tendency for the church to be identified with this old morality, he said. "It is most important that the church be far more flexible" as rules and regulations change in society.

Stockholders Seek Damages

NEW YORK (AP) — Stockholders filed suit against Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., Friday, claiming they lost money because news of a rich ore discovery near Timmins, Ont., was withheld by the firm and some of its officers.

The 35 stockholders asked for $2,520,000 in punitive damages and about $200,000 actual damages.

They said they purchased 4,102 shares of Texas Gulf over a period of years and that the withholding of the news of the ore strike caused them to sell their holdings at far below their true value.
