

The Return of BAD PARKING

by: Sean Brady & Rob MacPherson

Seems to me that the last time I saw some fool (a.k.a. parking impaired individual) park there their vehicle got towed. Hmm.... On second thought, go ahead and keep doing it. I was hoping to get some towing pictures before the year was out!

OK. Apparently something wasn't made clear to this person when they took their drivers test, so to avoid repetition let me notify everyone of this at the same time: a sign displaying a speed limit doubles as a "NO PARKING" sign. What's worse? There was someone else parked in front of them, so not only are the idiots coming out of the woodwork to perform their art at UPEI, they're bringing their friends.

Recipe for getting noticed: get yourself a big yellow half-ton, then park it half in/half out of a parking space, completely disregarding the other rows of neatly parked vehicles.

How does this relate to parking? It doesn't really. I just found it funny that even the wheelbarrow buckled under the weight of tuition.

That's right folks, the rumours are true. There are actually people out there dumb enough to park three wide.

What was that excuse again? Can't see the lines? Maybe if you're blind I suppose but in that case, you shouldn't really be driving anyway should you?
