O B WADMAN, of Crapaud, writes: "After trying many experiments this summer on my own cow, I have at last discovered a cheap and substantial remedy. Cod oil, petroleum, coal oil, etc, should not be used, as they are injurious to the cattle, and I am persuaded that farmers who have used those remedies will, after examination, find a great many sores." He will supply the remedy for 40 cts per gallon which will be sufficient quantity for twenty cows. One application will last for ten or twelve days. THE SOUBRETTE.

When Mary White married the young lawyer, Vincent Allison, she promised him she would leave the stage and never return to it. And it was no sort of release from her pledge that he had kept secretly any of the many vows he had made to her at the same time.

Of course her name was not Mary White on the play bills. The profession knew her as Antoinette Le Blanc. The leading lady said she was sacrificing enough when she married. It was absolute madness to give up the stage. But there must have been sedate qualities in her, for she turned from the theatre where she had been applauded nightly and retired so happily into her pretty home that the whole period of her stage life began to seem like a dream.

Vincent Allison undoubtedly had a future. If he had paid as much court to the deity of home as his once feted wife was doing daily, the marriage might have proved the wisest step in his life. But after a month he returned to his old companions and treated his home much as he had formerly treated his bachelor apartments—as a convenient place to visit when all other places were closed.

One day he came home and found the rent man waiting for him. Mary said he had been waiting three hours. She wondered why he didn't wait at the office.

"I'll pay you when I get ready," said Vincent Allison, angrily. "I won't be hounded by your petty bills. If you don't like that you know what you can do."

The agent did. And the next day there was a "dispossess notice" in the house.

While the truckman was moving the furniture to the more modest flat Mary had selected, she, riding on an open street car, saw a great tally-ho go by; and Vincent Allison, bordering on the hilarious, was of the party.

Instead of tossing her checks, as he had done formerly when she mentioned domestic needs, he presently gave her in cash rather less than she asked for, and said he would hand her the rest "by and by." Later, still, he sent her with notes to this man and that man in downtown offices. She supposed he was calling in loans he had made them. Time and again she recognized in these business men, these hurried, exacting, folly despising fellows, former habitues of the theatres where she had danced and sung. Of course they did not know her.

Presently she realized she was not collecting old loans, but making new ones. Vincent Allison was borrowing money.

One day a lawyer to whom she went—a man who had tossed her bouquets in the old days, and written her notes offering carriage rides and suppers—threw her husband's letter back to her with the exclamation:

"I will not do it. I will not be a party to it. He is borrowing money from every one he ever knew. Why don't he go to work? He had a better chance than any of us; if he hadn't married that Le Blanc woman. But it is always the way. It is inevitable. Their extravagance would break a man with the income of a—"

"Wait a minute," said Mary; and the calm strength of her address compelled him to pause. You have yourself paid a good deal of court to those same women in the past. What you say now makes your motives then appear in a not altogether creditable light."

"What court have I ever paid to them?" he demanded.

"I think I have some of your notes—though none of them was ever answered."

"Who are you?"

"Marie Antoinette Le Blanc, and I'm not extravagant. I know how to save, and I'm saving. But I don't think it's fair—"

"I beg your pardon, Mrs. Allison. I really beg your pardon. Don't say another word. I was a brute."

He was nervously opening his pocket-book. He offered her twice the sum Allison had asked for. But she would not take it. When she got home a messenger boy was waiting for her at the head of the stairs, with a note from the lawyer, inclosing money her husband had asked for. She returned it without a word of explanation.

Vincent Allison did not come home that night, but about noon next day he appeared. With a woman's dread of debt, she had refrained from buying anything; and the scant luncheon she provided him was by no means equal to the demands of his pampered appetite.

"Why don't you send out and get something to eat?" he demanded.

"I have no money."

"What became of the roll you got from Littleton?"

"He didn't—I didn't get any."

But the lie half chocked her, and she told him all the truth, and begged him to live differently.

"You have a future," she said, unconsciously repeating the general estimate which his youth had earned.

"Oh, we all have futures," he said. "The trouble is, some of us have pasts as well."

But he gave her a little money, and she went to the market. Awaiting her at the house was Bessie Worrall, desolate and weeping—Bessie Worrall, who used to be the gayest dancer at the Arcade, the lightest of laughter, and the sauciest of speech. Maybe the pace had been too fast for her. Anyway, she was penniless now, and friendless and hungry. A former stage hand at the Arcade, now manager at Stout's, the big, cheap, East Side Concert Hall, had offered her a chance.

"And I'm so hungry and weak I can't dance. What will I do, Marie? Oh, what shall I do?"

Mary's heart went out to her in a motherly pity. Indeed, the girl was not able to sit up. Her hostess put her in bed, juggled with her kitchen utensils for a few minutes, and came in with what looked very like a supper. She was quite a magician in such affairs. Often she had to be.

Bessie Worrall grew quiet presently and fell into a deep sleep. Manifestly she had not been so comfortable in a long time. Mary looked at her and then at the clock. It was nearly time for reporting at the concert hall. Failure there meant a good deal to Bessie. Yes, losing this sleep might mean a good deal.

And that is where Marie Antoinette Le Blanc broke her word.

At 8 o'clock she walked down the hall at Stout's and met the manager. He remembered Marie, and was frank enough to express himself as delighted at Bessie's illness since it gave him so valuable a substitute. Few singers ever faced an audience at Stout's in so modest a dress as hers. The auditors, of both sexes, lounging at little tables with bottles and glasses, looking coldly at this new woman. She sang an old-fashioned ditty, and some of them applauded—but not many. How little she cared.

The audience was a new one when she went on at 11 o'clock. Probably not more than half a dozen persons were there who had seen her earlier. She sang a homely ballad, but they didn't like it. A particularly boisterous crowd of well-dressed people in one of the favorite sections of the house expressed displeasure. Concert hall moods change a good deal between 8 and 11 o'clock at night. But they had aroused her combativeness and she turned back sudenly. She asked for a quickstep, and she danced as few women had ever danced on the shoddy little stage at Stout's. They applauded her warmly. The leader of the orchestra—who had conducted in better places—was glad to second her. And when she asked for a medley—partly spoken, partly sung, and with a piquant dance—he followed her without a hint of rehearsal.

That captured the house, and they would not let her go. The manager came back from the bar to revel in the fruits of good managemtnt.

And she faced the audience again—a little wearied, her heart full of the miserable shame of it all—and she sang them a singular song.

For pleasure or pain, for weal or for woe,
'Tis the law of our being—we reap as we sow,
We may strive to evade them, may do what we will;
But our acts, like our shadows, will follow us still.

The painted girls stopped gossiping. The men stopped drinking. Even that crowd in the favored corner was attentive. She understood—she knew—they wanted more; and she gave it them:

Though life may appear a desolate track,
Yet the bread that we cast on the water comes back,
We reap as we sow. O wonderful truth!
Yet a truth hard to learn in the days of our youth.
But it shines out at last like the hand on the wall
For this world has its debt and its credit for all.
For weal or for woe, we reap as we sow—
For weal or for woe, we reap as we sow.

"Think of that at Stout's," said a man in the favored corner. "Where are you going, Allison?"

Mary, returning to bow her thanks, saw her husband rise from that group and pass out. At the door he was waiting for her.

"I'm much obliged," said the manager. "Tell Bessie it's all right."

Vincent Allison went out next morning and bought some provisions for breakfast. At 9 o'clock he went down town, and at night he came home again. At the end of three months they moved back to their former flat, and six months later he regained his old place in the firm.

Last year the "man with a future" and the "woman with a past" entertained me at dinner, and I don't know a happier home anywhere, nor one which seems more likely to remain happy.

Wherefore, I beg you to remember there are promises that are better broken than kept.—Commercial Advertiser.

His Way.

"Was your husband good to you during your long illness?" inquired the kind lady who was making a charity call.

"Oh, yes, indeed, ma'am!" replied the poor woman; "as good as could be—he was more like a friend than a husband."—Puck.

A PARALLEL CASE.

People in Detroit are Interested in a Great Resemblance in Two Cases

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 26.—Much interest has been manifested here over the recovery of Mr. G. H. Kent, of Ottawa, from Bright's disease by using Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which is now in universal use, and many people have a clear recollection of the similar case which occurred in London, Ontario, not long ago, namely, that of Mr. Wm. Langley, who for sometime was an inmate of Harper's Hospital here and was operated upon without effect by several Detroit physicians. It was owing to this connection with Detroit and the long accounts published in the press that so much interest was taken in the case, and led to such an enormously increased sale of the medicine.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. is on every wrapper.
