

The Daily Examiner

SEPTEMBER 25, 1885.

The New Minister of Justice.

The Premier and the country at large are to be congratulated on the change by which Nova Scotia loses one of the brightest ornaments of its Bench of Judges, and Canada gains a Cabinet Minister. It was an ingenious and happy stroke on the part of Sir John McDonald. There is not in Nova Scotia a man of higher personal character, or of more conspicuous ability in his profession, than Judge Thompson, nor one who commands in a greater degree the confidence and respect of the people of the Maritime Provinces. The new Minister of Justice will, we have no doubt, adorn the Ministerial office to which he has been called, as he has adorned the Judicial office from which he has been taken. Sir Alexander Campbell and Mr. Carling have been relegated to Departments with which they are familiar, and we may hope that the newly constructed Cabinet will, under its sage old leader, prove eminently successful in the conduct of the public affairs of this Canada of ours.

Riel's Case.

The Independent Liberal press are often constrained to censure the Grit party and press for their manifest unfairness towards the Government. Grip's cartoon on Reciprocity was one instance, and here is another from the Montreal Witness—a staunch Reform journal. The Witness, referring to Riel's case, says:—

"There are journals so destitute of either heart or conscience as to be able to treat a question of life or death to a human being simply and solely as an opportunity for the manufacture of political capital. These journals, believing the Government of the day, to which they are politically opposed, to be between the horns of a dilemma with regard to the execution of Riel, are anxious only to keep themselves free to impale the Government upon whichever horn its action may throw it against. Their plan is to embarrass the Government, and to force upon its attention those considerations of political expediency which it is the Government's first duty to leave out of the question in making its decision. If the question of Riel's execution was one of conscience or of heart with them they would be found either opposing or advocating commutation. The only alternative for a conscientious journal is to seek to leave the Government as free from embarrassment as possible in order that its decision may be made on the highest grounds. They choose none of these courses. One day they will show that the Government is as much, if not more, to blame than Riel for the execution in the North-west and that it has confessed as much by its action. The next day they will dwell upon how richly Riel deserves death, in having rendered the sacrifice of his lives of so many young Canadians necessary; and they declare that the Government will, out of fear of their French supporters of this province, not dare to hang him. Whichever course the Government chooses, that course they will be free to maintain was wrong, and they will declare the choice was made from wrong considerations, though the very considerations they will condemn are the ones they are pressing upon the Government. These journals are naturally very angry with an independent journal, which does not afraid to express its own opinions upon the subject, determined not to embarrass the Government."

Mr. McKenzie's Unfair Comparison.

The Patriot says THE EXAMINER is "wrong again"; but the Patriot is (politically) wrong all the time; and the comparison instituted by Mr. A. B. McKenzie, between the taxes per head of the people of Canada and the United States, is essentially and radically wrong. We have to thank the Patriot for referring to the matter, and we accept the opportunity it affords to place the unfairness of Mr. McKenzie's comparison in a still clearer light.

The "wrong" of which THE EXAMINER is guilty is the omission from the expenditures of the Government of the large, extraordinary and abnormal outlay caused by the Riel rebellion; but it is, of course, quite right for Mr. McKenzie and the Patriot to add this extraordinary and abnormal expenditure—an expenditure belonging to this year only—to swell the total expenditure of the Government of Canada in a comparison with the ordinary expenditure of the Federal Government of the United States!

But let that pass. The Patriot does not and cannot deny THE EXAMINER's statement that no fair comparison can be made between the expenditures of two Governments established on bases which are widely different, and carried on under widely different circumstances. Its attempts to bolster up its case by instancing the naval and consular services of the United States only proves this the more strongly. And if so, it is clearly wrong to make the expenditures of the two countries a basis on which to compare the taxation of the people of the two countries.

But, further, it is manifestly wrong to take the total expenditures of the Canadian Government as a measure of taxation. For instance, the working expenses paid by the Government for the Prince Edward Island Railway last year amounted to about $220,000; according to Mr. McKenzie and the Patriot that was all taxation. But was it? Not at all. The receipts of the P. E. Island Railway were about $145,000; and the amount paid out of the taxes of the country was really only about $75,000. Again, the Government expended on the working of the Intercolonial Railway in 1884, $2,344,579; and Mr. McKenzie takes in that large amount and calls it taxation. But the Intercolonial Railway yielded a surplus of nearly $10,000. So that, though the Government expended nearly two and a quarter millions on the Intercolonial, the Intercolonial was no burden to the tax payers, but, on the contrary, an assistance to them. Like instances might be derived from the canal service, the post office service, and many other services, which yield revenue, as well as require expenditure. To obtain a correct idea of the burden of taxation, the receipts from various public departments must be subtracted from expenditure chargeable to income; and when Mr. McKenzie does this, he will find that the taxation of the people of Canada is very much less than $7 per head.

The Steamer M. A. Starr Goes Ashore

AFTER SMASHING UP TWO SCHOONERS.

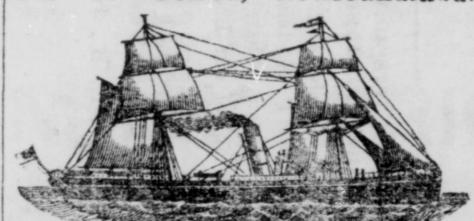

A furious south-east gale raged at Lunenburg on the night of the 23rd. The steamer M. A. Starr broke her guards at the wharf, and was compelled for safety to anchor in the harbor. At daylight the storm increased to a howling hurricane. Steam was kept up, but it was found impossible to hold. The steamer commenced dragging on shore at ten, on the morning of the 24th, and fouled with the schooner Dictator, of Lunenburg, carrying away the latter's jibboom and all her head gear, besides causing other damage. The Starr had thirty feet of her quarter rail torn off, the starboard boat smashed, davits carried away, after-house stove in and saloon windows broken on the starboard side. Getting clear she drifted on to the schooner Senator, of Lunenburg, grinding her bow fearfully. The anchor fouled with the schooner's chains and the steamer became managless. She grounded heavily on the beach, but at noon the gale moderated and she hove off by great exertion, shipped her chain and was docked. No one was injured. The officers and crew did their utmost. No blame is attached to them and she will proceed as soon as possible.

Blown from a Yard.

THE DEATH OF A P. E. ISLANDER IN THE GREAT AUGUST CYCLONE.

Nearly every vessel that has arrived at this city from a foreign port during the past week, says the Philadelphia Press, has brought an account of a terrible hurricane on the 25th of August, during which they suffered more or less damage. The first craft to report loss of life in this cyclone is the ship Shelburne, Captain Murphy, which anchored in the river opposite Kaighn's point Tuesday afternoon. During the fierce hurricane Joseph Corish, 41 years of age, a native of Prince Edward Island, and a seaman, was blown out of the rigging into the sea and lost. Capt. Murphy recounted the story of the voyage thus: "We left Glasgow on the 3rd of August and had pleasant weather until the 12th, when a heavy gale from the north struck us in lat. 47 50, lon. 38. This storm made the vessel tremble for about two hours, but we weathered it without accident. From the 12th to the 25th good weather prevailed. On the latter date we were skipping along under all sails, and a good breeze was blowing from the south-west. It increased in velocity, however, during the morning. In N. lat. 38.45, W. lon. 61.55, a fierce hurricane broke upon us. The sails began to rattle in the gaskets with a noise resembling a heavy thunderstorm. In a short time the foretopgallant sail was blown right out of the gaskets. A few minutes later the maintopgallant-sail was split by the wind, and it was flapping about in the rigging in a dangerous manner. I ordered three sailors to go aloft and furl the sail. Among the men was Corish. With great difficulty they reached the maintopgallantmast yard. The wind was roaring through the sails and whistling about the rigging, while the split sail was flying first to the port and then to the starboard side of the ship, making their position very hazardous. The men had to cling to the yard and wait for an opportunity to catch the loose sail. Corish, who was an excellent sailor, grasped the sail as the wind carried it past him. It was going with lightning velocity, and carried the man from his position on the yard, swinging him clear of everything into the air. He dangled in the air for a few seconds, holding on to the flying piece of sail, and then the whirlwind caught him and carried him into the sea. I was standing at the rail of the ship when he went down, and watched him to make his appearance on the surface. He did not come up. The force of the fall must have killed him. The other men succeeded in furling the sail, but they exercised great care and caution, as their position was a most perilous one."
