P. E. I. Department of Agriculture

The Prince Edward Island Agricultural Record for 1952 is now history; during that period we have been blessed with good weather and excellent crops. Outstanding records of performance and excellent showing in various agricultural shows have won a favourable position for our livestock and farm produce.

one pint of warm water or skim-milk, or enough to clear the cream from the machine. 4. Place about one tablespoon of a wetting agent in the supply tank. Then pour in a pail of warm water. Be sure it is a full pail and heated to about 120° F. See that the wetting agent is dissolved and let this go through the separator while the bowl is running down. While the solution is running from the machine brush the supply tank inside and out with a soft brush; also the inside and outside of the cream and skim-milk spouts, and the separator frame.

The officials of the Department of Agriculture wish to take this opportunity to wish the farmers of this Province a very Happy and Prosperous 1953.

Ice To Cool Milk

This is the time of year when consideration and planning should be done in reference to the storing of ice for next summer. One of the first essentials is to estimate the quantity of ice required for the amount of milk produced. To assure suitable storage space for the ice when cut.

To estimate the amount of ice to store to cool milk it is necessary to calculate the quantity of milk to be cooled during the period. Three pounds of ice are required to cool one pound of milk from 100° to 40° F. The quantity of milk multiplied by three and divided by two thousand equals the tons of ice necessary.

The tons of ice required multiplied by forty cu. feet equals the total number of cu. feet or the size of ice house necessary. About one to one and a half should be added to each dimension of house to allow for packing material which is usually sawdust.

The Two-Minute Method

Cream separator users will appreciate and welcome this quick effective new method, which was developed by Prof. Rudnick of the Iowa State College, and is made possible by the use of wetting agents. The wetting agent is a comparatively new product with which perhaps many are not familiar.

Wetting agents should not be confused with soap powder, for although they look like soap and act like soap they have many advantages not possessed by soap. It should be emphasized that this method can be used only with wetting agents.

An outstanding characteristic of the wetting agent is its property of reducing the surface tension of water. Wetting agents leave no fatty residue, mineral deposit or scum and rinse out freely. They function perfectly in hard water. The separator must be clean to start with.

1. After all the milk has left the supply can, shut off the power or stop turning the crank. 2. Rinse the supply can with a cup of warm water and shut off the faucet. 3. Add directly over the float

Christmas At The Ch'town Hospital

Every department of the Charlottetown Hospital has presented a festive appearance for the holy season of Christmas. Decorations vary from solemn scenes depicting the manger at Bethlehem to a modern Rudolph, the Red-nosed Reindeer in the Pediatric department, painted by a student nurse. Carolers from Notre Dame Academy and the Y. M. C. A. added greatly to festivities by coming to the hospital to sing for the patients. This gesture was deeply appreciated by all, and it is hoped that it will be an annual feature of the Christmas season.

On Tuesday, before Christmas the Hospital staff were invited to the Solarium, and as student nurses sang: "Here Comes Santa Claus," that jolly old man himself appeared on the scene.

A gay period followed in which Santa distributed candy and a gift to each employee. The student nurses entertained with Christmas carols and Santa himself rendered two solos. "This was the first year that such a get-together was held and it was greatly enjoyed by all.

On Christmas Eve student nurses, who had remained at the hospital, for Christmas, sang carols to help bring the Christmas spirit to the sick. Later, that same evening Santa came and visited each patient.

The staff of the Charlottetown Hospital are most grateful to the Notre Dame Academy and the Y. M. C. A. carollers and to R. T. Holman Ltd. for their very enjoyable entertainments during this Yuletide Season.

The number of deaths in continental United States in 1950 was estimated at 1,456,000.

We And Our Neighbours

by Ruhamah Scheinfeld Frank

"I WISH I COULD FORGET"

At the peak of the Christmas rush, we met a friend in the doorway of one of our most crowded stores. He had such a forlorn look, that we asked, "What's the trouble? Are you lost?"

"Lost?" he repeated thoughtfully: "That's just what I was. Come on, I'll buy you a cup of coffee and tell you about it. Maybe it will help get it out of my system."

"Well", he said, "it's really nothing so different. You've probably seen similar incidents. Mother took me along because she had no place to leave me while she did some Christmas shopping. I was about four years old and had seldom been away from the farm and the store seemed jammed with all the people in the world. Mother didn't need to warn me to hold on to her. I clung for dear life, but somebody pushed me and mother and I were separated."

"I don't believe," he said, "that I felt as panic-stricken the first time I saw under enemy fire. The noise, the glare, the things on sale, and the people, pressed around me—and I was deserted, perhaps forever, by my mother, the all-powerful protector!"

"I stood there crying and trembling, for what seemed hours but was likely only a minute or two and then I saw mother. I ran toward her joyfully, arms outstretched, and she—I've seen it happen to other kids and I could commit murder—instead of picking me up and kissing me—took hold of me and shook me and gave me a few hard spans. 'You bad boy', she said, 'I told you to hold on to mother. This will teach you a lesson, not to run away.'"

"Poor mother, I can understand now, that she was nervous and frightened herself. But I suppose there were other incidents. I'm what you might call a dutiful son—but not a loving one." His smile was rueful.

More deliberately cruel than the punishment of the frightened child who had done no wrong, was the drastic punishment for a minor offence, also to "teach a lesson", related in the following recollection.

"Mother was a stern individual," said our friend. "I don't know yet how she was persuaded to say we would have a Christmas tree, for the first time, the year I was six years old. I guess there wasn't a happier child."

Our friend paused and actually seemed to cringe before this memory of some forty years ago, but she continued, "A few days before Christmas I saw a large box in mother's room and took a peek. I was dazed by the marvelous things I saw—a glittering star, colored balls—things for the Christmas tree! I was turning away when mother pounced down on me. Now you'll never have a Christmas tree! she said with a hating face and through set teeth. 'That will teach you a lesson not to touch things that don't belong to you'."

"And we never did have a tree," sighed my friend. "I wish I could erase this from my mind. 'Maybe mother and I could be better friends'."

"Spare the rod and spoil the child", been quoted. May the New Year bring to increasing numbers of children, parents who follow the ways of the mother described in that Book of Proverbs: "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and the law of kindness is on her tongue."
