We intend making FLOUR one of our leading lines, and with that end in view we will keep in stock a full supply of the different grades, which we will sell FOR CASH as low, if not lower, than any other firm in the city.

The MATCHLESS Brand, of which we have just received a Carload, has greatly improved the past two months, and is now much better than ever before. This is owing to the fact that the proprietors have re-fitted their Mill with the latest improved and best machinery at a cost of over $20,000, and are using only the best No. 1 Wheat.

We have also just received a quantity of a lower grade of Flour which we are selling very cheap.

Every Barrel warranted to be as we say it is. Call and see our grades and give us a trial.

FASHIONS FOR THE FALL

SOME DESCRIPTIONS OF GOWNS FOR AUTUMN WEAR.

Materials for Dressmakers—Black Moire to be Used—Notched Skirts—Velvet and Satin for Fall Gowns.

Early in September the average woman yearns for a new gown, but she does not wish a heavy winter one. This seems to be the time to sell regular fall goods and black materials as well. At this time many women buy a gown that is to be a "standby" all of the year, and that will never seem out of fashion, and for this general wear nothing surpasses a black wool or silk-warp fabric, and in 1893-94 black goods will be very much worn. If the retailers give shoppers such a selection of materials they can sell them, but if they are shown only very heavy goods many will say they do not wish to buy such goods before October, and will decide to do without the medium-weight gown before thought of.

The plain and changeable serges, neat suitings, English tweeds, that are never out of fashion; different cheviots, cords and silk-wrap goods, in mixed changeable effects, as well as the plain colors in Fayetta, Lanedowne, and such fabrics, are all now ready for buyers. Many of the novelties have enough silk mixed with them to make a decided difference in the weight. We all are acquainted with the lightness of silk-warp Henrietta, and some of the other goods in silk effects are even lighter. There can be no complaint for lack of variety, as the manufacturers have done their best this season, and besides the rich winter goods, in which rough or camel's hair and boucle effects are prominent, they have made plenty of the materials we are speaking of, so it only remains for the retailers to buy them and then properly advertise and show them.

Our first design is for plain or figured woollen goods trimmed with a few pretty buttons and two widths of velvet ribbon or fancy braid. The tiny Eton jacket has a diagonal front, which barely shows a vest that is fitted to come down over the skirt belt all around like a round waist, or a velvet ribbon belt could be worn. The trimming is a quarter and an inch and a half in width. Leg-of-mutton sleeves and a circular skirt in two parts, with the lower one faced up on the lining of the left side to the belt where the second skirt is opened.

Fig. 2 shows a neat jacket effect suitable for dressy gowns, which may have sleeves of silk like the blouse, or they could match a woollen skirt worn with this as an odd waist. The loose vest of changeable silk, surah, bengaline or silk muslin over silk is shirred around the neck to give an easy fullness. The jacket of velvet has a square back, short above the waist-line and fronts cut longer to catch on the lower edge, so they will drop over the pointed bodice fastening under a bow of ribbon on the left. The draped collar is of the best material, as is the bodice, and the jacket fronts are trimmed with jet, tinsel of silk embroidered fancy galloon giving a quaint foreign look to the garment.

The dressmaking of the immediate future is much in embryo just now, but I find in all the best quarters the V-shaped open front to the bodice is a marked feature. This is shown in Fig. 3.

Neutral tints are pretty and useful, but not always becoming, and this style enables any color to be introduced that will suit the complexion best; and silk is shown off better under guipure, black or white, and can be made changeable, thereby altering the character of the gown, an arrangement which is often a boon when traveling or visiting.

FEMININE FISH STORIES.

One Involves a Sagacious Dog, the Other a Fight With a Salmon.

There are few larger drains upon credulity than the dog stories which turn upon extraordinary displays of canine intelligence. Of course, a fish story is even worse. What apology can be offered, therefore, for the introduction of a combination of the two? The following anecdote, however, is well vouched for.

A young lady started out not long ago for a morning's fishing in a Welsh stream. She was accompanied by a retriever dog, highly trained in the accomplishment of bringing articles out of the water. The young lady threw out her line, and pursued her angling with a deep interest almost surpassed by that evinced by the dog. In fact, the young woman's attention slumbered for a moment, and, as luck would have it, at that very instant came a big tug at the line.

The angler, startled, lost her hold on the rod, which was at once dragged under water by the fish attached to the hook. Soon the end of the rod made its appearance, however, and the retriever, who had become intensely excited, immediately jumped in and seized it. He found it rather more difficult to bring to land than the walking stick to which he was accustomed, but finally landed his prize. The fish proved to be a chub, which gives a tremendous first pull, but is then generally done with, coming in like a log. A trout would have given the retriever more trouble.

This little Welsh incident recalls the story of another fair fisher who threw her line many years ago in another Welsh river, the Usk. She had a tremendous tussle with a salmon. The fish was hooked in the morning, probably in the back fin, and rushed to and fro with such extraordinary vivacity tha hour after hour passed without the least sign of its weakening. Luncheon time came. The lady gave the rod to the attendant to hold, and reinforced her strength with a hearty meal. Then she returned to the fray, and was dragged up and down the banks in a most unpleasant fashion by the rushes of the fish.

By the time the shades of night began to fall the news had spread through all the country around, and as twilight closed in the neighbors came with lanterns and candles, by whose uncertain light the fight was still carried on. At last, some fourteen hours after the hooking of the fish, the line was cut by a rock, and the episode ended with a very undeserved disaster for the angler, but well-earned freedom for the fish.—New York Sun.

FRIENDS, NOT LOVERS.

Can a Young Man and Woman Sustain That Relation?

Walter Besant has been answering the old question, "Why cannot men and women become friends?" His answer is that they can; that they do; that they have become friends; then he cites Mme. du Deffand and Horace Walpole, Mlle. Lespinasse and D'Alembert, but adds Mme. du Deffand was past fifty and blind, when she made a friend of Horace Walpole. The friendship of men was necessary to her; it was what survived of her love making. "I am not so sure," he says, "that friendship is possible between two young people of opposite sex. One knows perfectly well what will be said—cannot two people become friends without the tie being broken or spoiled by the intervention of that other passion? Well, you see, it is always present as a possibility; as a disturbing element.

He speaks of the colleges in America where the young men and women sit on the same benches to study or listen to lectures and pass the same examinations, but have not succeeded in creating a new atmosphere of friendship or Platonic love. "There are," he argues, "so many obstacles interposed by society, by convention, even by nature to this kind of friendship. The young man and the young woman who want to be friends cannot; they must not be seen too much together; they must not travel together; they cannot enjoy perfect freedom of conversation because there are many subjects of conversation quite proper for either alone, but tacitly forbidden between the two.

"A young man shall find, if you like, in a woman much older than himself a charming, kind and sympathetic friend—it is the very best kind of a friend that a young man can find; or an old man may find a woman much younger than himself to keep alive in him the waning fire of courage and self-reliance. But that a young man should find any young woman who would become to him an equal comrade as another man might be, entering into his views and requiring him also to enter into her own views on equal terms, that kind of equal alliance and friendship I do not ever expect to find between the youth and the maiden."

WHITE HOUSE VISITORS.

They Would Carry Baby Ruth Off Bodily if They Could.

Visitors to Washington always make a point of trying to get a sight at Ruth Cleveland and most of them are animated by a desire to embrace her or plant kisses all over her little tanned face simply for the sake of saying they had kissed the President's daughter. The little girl generally goes out to ride in the Victoria with her nurse, Annie, at 11 o'clock, when the weather permits. Of course she is compelled to go through the front lobby, but she never is permitted to walk from the private hall to the carriage on account of this propensity of tourists. She is always carried downstairs and to the carriage in the arms of the house usher, who will permit no liberties with his charge. In speaking of this matter to a friend a few days ago, Mrs. Cleveland said: "I have no objection whatever to people seeing Ruth and have no intention of hiding her from people. But what I do object to is their trying to kiss her or take such liberties as one woman whom we found with a tiny pair of scissors trying to cut out a lock of her hair."
