

LIFE'S TROUBLES.
 Though tangled hard life's knot may be,
 And wearily we rue it
 The silent touch of Father Time
 Some day will surely undo it.
 Then, darling, wait—
 Nothing is late,
 In the light that shines forever.

We faint at heart, a friend is gone;
 We chafe at the world's harsh drilling;
 We tremble at sorrows on every side,
 At the myriad ways of killing.
 Yet, say we all,
 If a sparrow fall,
 The Lord keepeth count forever.
 He keepeth count. We come, we go.

We speculate, toil and falter;
 But the measure to each, of weal or woe,
 God only can give or alter.
 He sendeth light,
 He sendeth night,
 And change goes on forever.

Why not take life with cheerful trust,
 With faith in the strength of weakness;
 The slenderest daisy rears its head
 With courage, yet with meekness.
 A sunny face
 Hath holy grace
 To woo the sun forever.

Forever and ever, my darling, yes—
 Goodness and love are undying;
 Only the troubles and cares of earth
 Are winged from the first for flying.
 Our way we plough
 In the furrow "now";
 But after the tilling and growing, the sheaf;
 Soil for the root, but the sun for the leaf—
 And God keepeth watch forever.

CARE OF PIGS.

Making Cheap and Healthy Pork.

COLONEL F. D. CURTIS.

The common practice of confining pigs in close pens during the summer is unhealthy and unprofitable. It is natural for a pig to be on the ground. Nature designed that a pig should root for its living, and hence it is provided with an organ adapted to this work. Breeding stock should never be confined in close quarters, if a healthy and productive condition is desired. Exercise is essential, and a variety of food, especially for a female with young, is highly beneficial. Pigs, for fattening may be closely confined for a limited period; but if kept so for any length of time there will be a loss of appetite or a feverish condition, which unfits them for food. Exercise and healthy digestion naturally go together. Every part of the body was made for a purpose, and there should be an opportunity for its development if a perfect condition is expected. With no employment of the muscles, tendons and organs for locomotion, the free use of which would give full exercise to the lungs and produce a healthy circulation of the blood—with all stomach work—how can it be expected that growing animals and those bearing young should be healthy and well-developed? When pigs are confined in pens they are usually fed stimulating food, and this helps to make it worse for them. It is the most expensive way of rearing pigs.

We have always had the best success with breeding sows when allowed to feed on grass. This is the only food they require until the young pigs are a week or two old, when milk, or meal of some sort, may be given to them to increase the flow of milk if they require it. Sows thus managed are never ugly and never destroy their pigs. Why? Because they are in a natural and healthy condition. The grass also increases the flow of milk and is, quite often, sufficient food for a sow while rearing her young. Young pigs soon learn to eat the grass, which is alike natural and healthful for them. We never had a case of scurf or thumps among young pigs when running in the pasture. The grass serves to counteract the effects of corn, and many pigs on grass can be fed heavily with this food without the injury which it would do them if confined and deprived of grass.

Our experience has convinced us that no farm is complete without a pig pasture. Clover is the best of all the grasses for this purpose, and next to it we prefer orchard grass, for the reason that it starts up promptly after being eaten off, is the earliest in the spring, and is relished by the pigs. It is not necessary to have a special field for the pig pasture, but they may be allowed to run in any lot if properly inclosed. There should be water in the field and plenty of grass. A patch of sweet corn sowed in drill, will be found convenient to supplement a shortened pasture in the late summer. There should also be another patch of turnips or other roots into which the pigs may be turned for fall feeding. With the three auxiliaries of pasture, sweet corn stalks, and a root patch, the cost of rearing and feeding pigs may be reduced to less than one half of their expense when they are confined and fed in pens, to say nothing about their better condition for food.

There is a great deal of complaint now-a-days about pork being too fat, and many people who used to eat old-fashioned pork, and relish it, will not eat the modern, improved sort. The main reason for this is because pigs are over-fed while young, and kept so closely confined that there is no proportionate growth and development of muscle (lean meat) with the fat (oil). My system of growing pigs, while it is more successful in the breeding, does at the same time make a growth of muscle and fat more nearly balanced. To make a perfect pig the feeding and the treatment should be such that the muscles and frame should be produced first, and the fat added on, whereas the practice of confinement and exclusive grass feeding makes the fat first, with scarcely any muscle or bone to support it. Pigs should be kept in a thrifty, growing condition until within a month of the time when they are wanted for slaughter, when they may be fed stronger, but not for a longer time. A big weight is not so good as a healthy pig. Old hogs may be stimulated for a longer time and be fatter, but these make better food if fattened on such natural feed as clover and roots, and topped off with corn.

A strong copper wire in a pig's nose will keep it from digging up the sod. An orchard is a suitable range for pigs, as they will eat all the fallen fruit, and thus destroy myriads of worms which would otherwise develop for future damage. If it is impossible for a farmer to let his pigs run out, he ought, for health's sake—and it is good food, too—to give them feedings of grass in the pens. We have kept hogs in this way all summer on grass alone.—Rural New Yorker.

Remedy for Hard Times.

Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but put your trust in the greatest of all simple pure remedies, Hop Bitters that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.
