It was an enjoyable time for the Islanders present as they recalled many fond memories of their old homeland, and they listened with great interest to Mr. and Mrs. Bruce, as they told of their vacation, and return trip on the Blue nose special.

The group joined in a lively sing-song, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. MacRae, who also entertained with a number of pleasing selection on the harmonica. She was assisted at the piano by Mrs. MacKenzie, and her daughter Jean.

Tea, coffee, sandwiches, and a delicious cake, was served by the ladies and everyone went home happy after sharing a perfect evening in the company of a congenial friendly P.E.I. couple.

There is excitement and fanfare here as one gazes at this beautiful wedding gown. The veil is voluminous and almost covers the dress. The model gracefully exhibits both.

WE AND OUR NEIGHBORS

Personalities Develop But Do Not Readily Change

Last week I was a guest at a lobster supper in honor of a group of "Old Homers." While the lobsters (caught that morning at Victoria) were boiling in their native salt water (just so long, not a minute more, not a minute less and how luscious they tasted!) the conversation got around to the changes made in our personalities by the passing years — the subject of a truer light be shed on the question than in this gathering of near relatives and life-long friends? It was interesting and of value to find that the experience of almost every guest was in agreement with the eminent authorities on human behavior — basically, our personalities change little. Many of us grow in understanding and maturity. Our interests broaden and deepen but self-confident, out-going children seldom become shy and retiring adults. Fearful, timid ones do not often grow bold and courageous.

HABITS FORMED

Why is this so? Because certain kinds of behavior in our childhood brought us the approval, the affection we all crave. We repeated the behavior until it became habitual. Sometimes we were forced to act in certain ways for the convenience of those who had authority whether we got approval or not—and if the act was repeated often enough it became a habit.

SAME FAMILY

A troubling question is why children brought up in the same home by the same parents are often so unlike. It is a long story but briefly, children do not necessarily receive the same treatment in the same home. The child's appearance, sex, order of birth, size, strength, intelligence, special abilities or disabilities influence the attitude of parents and the other members of the family. Different expectations and demands await every child. A smile or a frown can result from not dissimilar behavior on the part of the child. (Parents are not impartial no matter how they try to be)

An increasing number of scientists now believe there is evidence of inborn tendencies toward a certain pattern of behavior. As we know, some infants are more irritable, or more relaxed, more alert and friendly, or more passive and shy. Psychologists do not think that infants come into the world with definite "personalities" — these must develop in the course of relationships with others — but there do seem to be possibilities in infants of developing in one direction rather than another.

Whatever the complicated process of becoming what we are, it can be understood that it is more difficult to change, the older we get and the more our habits are fixed. We can give up smoking, but we can't develop a bold attack on our problems as the result of a New Year's Resolution! However, if we are going along quite well, as we are most of the time, let us accept ourselves as we are. But — in the time, we must seek out a psychiatrist can help us — he can help us — change—
