"Sir Francis Drake" Takes Advantage Of Rank

If Sir Francis Drake were to walk the fields of Devon again he would be startled to see his own apparent reincarnation in Lieut.-Cmdr. W. McLaughlin, right. McLaughlin was acting the part of the famous British admiral in a play, so he decided to use his rank to dip his fingers into the Christmas pudding being prepared at Devon naval barracks.

The Village Church

(Dedication) There in the sun-warmed earth They turned the sod And shaded o'er by virgin spruce And juniper, they built— An Altar unto God— Men with browned hands, and sun-tanned cheeks, The Pioneers in work-soiled tunic plied— Each stone, each rafter, and each beam, a prayer, Placed by the master hand with faith-born care— The walls—the roof—the tower— At last the cross, His standard, they had lifted up, and biding there, Heads bared and bowed, they sought God's answer to a holy deed of prayer— What had they asked?—A righteous God shall hear: "When, bottle scarred, these walls have crumbled into dust, And stones decayed, The souls so chained by faith to heaven shall shine, Building new altars in His chosen place— And through the eternal marches of unnumbered years, Blessings upon mankind their works shall land, Though Earth forget Men built an altar unto God." —Bookworm.
