The bidding:
North East South West
1♦ Pass 3♣ Pass
3♦ Pass 3NT

Opening lead—four of spades. Comparatively few players go in for psychic bidding, but there is a school of thought which strongly favors such deceptive tactics. We don't particularly advocate psychics in this column, but say and all players who like to live dangerously are welcome to indulge in the pastime whenever the urge possesses them.

This hand arose in a tournament and North, after noting the vulnerability and his miserable assortment of cards, felt constrained to open the bidding with a diamond. He hoped thereby to confuse the opponents to lose a lay-down game or slam. East passed.

South was Edgar Kaplan, prominent New York expert. Sensitive to the possibility his partner's diamond bid might be psychic, Kaplan decided to proceed with caution until North's values or lack of them were confirmed. Their partnership permitted an occasional spiball, and also included a gadget known as psychic control, by which it was possible to learn whether the opening bid was genuine.

According to this method, a jump shift by responder is forcing, even though the opener has bid a psychic. The psychic is identified by either rebidding the original suit or by bidding the requisite number of notrump, whichever is cheaper.

Over a two heart response to one diamond, the rebid of two notrump categorically announces a psychic opening bid, while any other rebid would confirm a normal opening bid.

But Kaplan thought the matter over and decided against the two heart response. Instead, he came up with the ingenious bid of three clubs.

North was forced to bid three diamonds to identify the psychic. Warned thus of the true situation, Kaplan now bid three notrump which was easily made. Four hearts would have failed.

But if Kaplan had made the normal response of two hearts, the game would have been lost. North's two notrump bid would put East on lead against a no-trump game, and a club lead would defeat the contract.

Maybe it pays to live dangerously.

Conservatives In U.K. Seen Losing Prestige

LONDON (AP)—With 10 days to go in the general election campaign, Prime Minister Macmillan's Conservatives today looked to be losing ground to the Labor party.

A week ago a Labor victory seemed practically out of the question. Dramatically and suddenly the battle has swung Labor's way and put the Conservatives on the defensive.

Political analysts are explaining the Labor advance with widely differing reasons.

One is television. This is the first election in which Britain has had blanket television coverage. And Labor's use of the medium is generally accepted to be far more skillful than the Conservatives'.

The Labor telecasts are bright magazine-style productions featuring big-name professional performers. One program even entered the top 10 in the ratings along with Cheyenne and Gun Law.

Another is the Conservative effort so far, by contrast, a family chat between Macmillan and his ministers in a chintzy drawing room. Even Macmillan seemed near yawning.

Labor seems to be getting an extra boost by plugging retirement pensions as the biggest domestic issue of the election.

If they win, they say they will introduce a new pensions system to give every retired person a pension equal to half his former salary.

The Conservatives say this scheme could wreck the national economy. They have a less ambitious one of their own which Labor is denouncing with a steady chant of "swindle."

The Labor party has another advantage in "the Jasper affair"—a big-money financial scandal which came as a gift from heaven.

Its essence is that an apparently booming building society is left short of £3,900,000 ($10,920,000). Much of it came from small investors who fear they may lose part of their money.

WANT CONTROLS
Labor is using the scandal to emphasize its demands for stricter controls on the stock exchange and for a capital gains tax to take the profit out of speculation. The Conservatives concede that some change in investment law may be needed.

Finally there is the influence of the opinion polls.

When campaigning started, they were unanimous in giving the Conservatives a heavy lead.

Last week, however, The Daily Mail poll showed the Conservative lead had dropped to 3½ points from seven and The News Chronicle's showed a similar narrowing to four from 5½. The Daily Express was alone in finding the Conservative lead steady.

Premier Price Said For Steel: Scramble Likely To Continue

CLEVELAND (AP)—The scramble for steel is on and will continue to intensify until several weeks after the mills reopen," the magazine steel said Sunday.

As the steel strike dragged through the 11th week, the magazine summed up the steel market this way:

"Consumers are scouring the country for badly needed sheets, plates, bars, and structurals. They're paying premium prices, absorbing extra freight, signing costly conversion contracts—doing whatever is necessary to stay in business. Unless they find what they need, they'll have to cut production or shut down."

Fear that an iron ore shortage may hamper production next spring was expressed by steel. Most of the Great Lakes fleet, which spends the warm months building ore stockpiles to tide the industry over when the lakes are frozen by winter, was tied up by the strike.

The industry will barely scrape through spring production if: The strike ends about Oct. 1; Lake vessels resume shipping quickly;

December weather permits ore shipping;

Eastern steelworkers, handling foreign ore, don't strike;

Rail labor doesn't halt traffic with a strike.

The magazine estimated that almost $4,000,000,000 has been lost in wages, salaries and taxes since the strike began.

Another loss has been the Canadian steel market, the magazine said, Canada, which imports more than 500,000 tons of finished steel annually from the U.S., is turning to European and Japanese markets.

Nikita Refuses Bid To Church

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP)—Premier Khrushchev Sunday turned down an invitation from President Eisenhower to go to church. He said it would be a shock to his people.

That was the way Rev. Robert A. MacAskill relayed the story to reporters as he got it direct from the president.
