

The first appearance of the adult nodular worms in exposed lambs is usually in September; the number increases gradually until February or March.

As there are no means of destroying these parasites until they are free in the intestines, any worm medication during the summer and early autumn is of no value for the control of nodular disease. The latter part of February and March is the time to administer Phenothiazine for nodular worms.

By treating the adult stock with large doses of Phenothiazine to remove the nodular worms from the intestines before the animals go to pasture, is the best time to treat for control of nodular worms. It must be remembered that the basic principle of this treatment is in combination with the lethal effects of winter on the pasture infection. In other words, the winter will kill off the eggs which are on the pasture. Sheep should not have access to these pastures in the spring before they are treated. The dosage of Phenothiazine not only attacks the nodular worms, but also destroys other types of parasites which infest sheep.

Phenothiazine tablets are a most effective winter treatment for the control of stomach and intestinal worms in sheep. They may be given any time between the first of February and one month before lambing, or from five days after lambing to twenty-four hours before turning out to pasture.

Certain definite rules and procedure should be followed when giving this treatment:

1. Treat all adult animals, including the ram.

2. The number of tablets to be given depends upon the weight of the sheep as follows:

(a) Up to one hundred pounds in weight — three compound tablets (12 1/2 grams each).

(b) Over one hundred pounds in weight — four compound tablets (12 1/2 grams each).

3. Here in eastern Canada where the nodular worm is prevalent, these recommended dosages should not be reduced.

Phenothiazine is not a poisonous drug. There is little or no danger of over dosing as sheep are tolerant to much larger doses than are recommended.

The urine of treated animals contains large amounts of a red dye for approximately four days after dosing. In the case of ewes that are not shorn, if precautions are not taken a part of the fleece may be permanently stained. The flock should be kept in a well bedded pen or yard.

The tablets for piling the sheep may be obtained through your district veterinarians or at the Department of Agriculture, Richmond Street, Charlottetown.

THE HERD BULL

One of the greatest problems of the breeder is to find the right bull to mate successfully with his females. The strength and weakness of the herd must be known before the bull is chosen as well as some knowledge of the immediate ancestors. Science has made strides in the recent years in the science of genetics, but this science can not yet be regarded as a fixed science; therefore, animal breeding continues more as an art than as a science, depending therefore upon the breed, the eye discernment.

In the December issue of the Shorthorn News published by the Canadian Shorthorn Association, you will find an extremely interesting illustrated article dealing with some points to be observed in making the choice of a herd bull. In the Dual Purpose section are the illustrated characteristics which are essential in Dual Shorthorn cows and bulls.

POULTRY HOUSE WINDOWS

Mr. J. W. Hough in a November issue of Featherfax, made this interesting observation: "It is a habit with many poultrymen to walk in the pen on a cold morning and throw open the windows, the idea being the birds need the cold fresh air to keep healthy. We even have folks like this who jump out of bed in the morning and then freeze to death for a few minutes while inhaling that cold fresh air. (It's hard to say whether the cold one often catches offsets the benefits allegedly obtained from the fresh air.) To get back to chickens, let the pen warm up in the morning before opening the windows. Then open the middle windows first. You won't have so much trouble with cold air rushing in, moisture condensing, and wet litter."

CHINCHILLA

The chinchilla is a small rodent somewhat resembling the common gray squirrel. It has prominent tactile hair protruding from its upper lip. The fur is very fine, with mottled guard hairs and a gray undercoat. The females are slightly larger than the males, weighing about 1 1/2 lb. The color and marking of both sexes are the same. There are two species, Chinchilla laniger and Chinchilla brevicaudata, the latter difference being that the latter species is slightly larger and darker.

Although the chinchillas originated from the Andes mountains of South America, they can be raised almost anywhere in the United States. Ranchers with a limited number of animals may keep them in dry and well-ventilated basements. If a special building is planned for chinchilla-raising, it should be situated so that its length runs in a north-south direction which will allow a maximum amount of sunlight to the animals.

There is quite a wide variation in the type of housing and pen equipment used. They should have a wire bottom so they can be cleaned easily. A nest box may be used. Soft-drink bottles can be used as waterers; some ranchers use a continuous drip-type system. Chinchillas need a dust bath. They should have a pan or box containing a mixture of Fuller's earth and white sand placed in their pen every other day. A hayrack and a self-feeder for pellets should be included as part of the equipment for each pen. Exercise wheels are not necessary.

The pens must be cleaned as they become dirty. The interval is dependent on the type of pen that is employed. Most mild disinfectants can be employed. Cresol compounds should not be used, since there have been reports of instances where they have caused a severe inflammation of the feet. It is important to wash the water bottles at frequent intervals.

The breeding unit should have an area designated for the storage of hay and pellets. Some feed rooms have a solid bale-sized bin for hay. Garbage cans may be used to store pellets. Mice and dogs must be kept away from feeds that the chinchillas are to consume.

The young chinchillas should be closely observed the first few days after they are born to make sure they are well nourished; however, they usually are very active. In the case of orphan young or a weak dam, a lactating nursing pig may be substituted and dry Pabulum may be fed. Occasionally, one may hear unusual noises in the nest box. This may indicate that the young chinchillas' teeth are so sharp that the dam will not allow them to nurse. Such teeth can be dulled a bit with an emery board such as is ordinarily used for filing fingernails.

A litter consists of 1 to 4 young, the average being about 2, and they are weaned at about 60 days. Tattoo marks are made in the ears so that individual animals can be identified. The pet becomes prime from December to February, depending on local climatic conditions. At present, there has not been a pet price established and the industry exists solely on the sale of breeding stock. The most convenient way to handle chinchillas is by grasping their tail at the base when removing it from its pen. Chinchillas may bite, but they are not considered vicious.

Print Competition Held At Camera Club Meeting

The Charlottetown Camera Club met on Monday evening at the "Y" with seventeen present. At the close of the business meeting, the president drew attention to the annual P.E.I. Salon of Amateur Photography scheduled for March, and stated that all who intend to enter pictures should begin working on them right away.

The nine entries in Class B "Festive" competition were judged by Roland Taylor and placed as follows: 1st.—Bob Hambly; 2nd. Marion Dockendorff; 3rd.—Alice Chandler. The prints in Class A competition were judged by President Bob Donnelly who had not prepared an entry. The placing was: 1st and 2nd—Margaret Mallett; 3rd—Roland Taylor.

Color photography was featured during the remainder of the program, beginning with a demonstration on mounting transparencies in glass slide binders. Bob Donnelly outlined the procedure for making transparencies from the past few color films. He then presented for comparison several pairs of similar slides showing the effect of varying exposures and of different types and makes of film. "Better Vacation Pictures" was the subject of a very fine lecture procured from a well known photographic manufacturing firm. The script was read by George Lewis. Another slide lecture is available for the next meeting, on Jan. 23rd, at which time the entries in Class A competition "Children" will be judged.
