Hold Farm Hand In Brutal Slaying of Young Mother of Four

County-Wide Search Ended When Accused Surrendered to Police

Mrs. Algire, Found Stabbed

Twins, Dean and Donna, Three, Unaware of Tragedy

Elias Meek, Charged With Murder

The Thorpe Affair

By Phillip Lesly

"He seemed to be in a hurry for some reason, anyway. He told me, 'I'll let you stay like that for a while; give you time to think, and put me in the closet.'"

As she spoke her rubbed her ached wrists reminiscently. Terry looked at them and frowned.

"Those will hurt like the devil unless you put something on them."

He went into the bathroom and opened the medicine chest. He returned in a few moments with a bottle of lotion.

"That's not all," Kay said while he rubbed the stuff on. "I'm pretty sure that after he put me into the closet somebody else came in. Anyway, I can swear I heard somebody that sounded like the one who tied me say, 'When I collect...'"

"Did you hear the other one?"

"No."

Terry pondered for a moment, looking at Kay reflectively.

"There's something I don't get. Why should you want to come here and horn in on this conference? And why did you take the chance the cops would pick you up? I told you not to leave your room, because it was too dangerous. And another thing, from your story you were here at 6 o'clock. But it was a lot earlier than that when I found out you weren't in your room. What's the dope?"

She looked at him uncertainly. He thought he saw the old sign of fright come back into her eyes. But before she could speak he heard an approaching sound and whirled.

"Here comes the house dick," he said tensely. "He's finally coming up to see what the shooting was about. Probably has a few cops with him by now. Quick, we've gotta get out of here."

"Wh-where'll we go?"

Terry looked about hurriedly. "You're wanted as a murder suspect. If they catch you it might be tough to get free again. And with us in the same suite with a man dying of a gunshot wound, you wouldn't stand a chance. I'd be held, too, so I couldn't help you. We've got to get out of here."

I'd hate to think of those lips of yours never smiling again. I'm funny that way; it's the little things that inspire me."

"Or maybe it's just the knight errant in you that needs expression. You know, the nobleness and chivalry inherent in every man. They say it's always a man's least known characteristic that appears during an emergency."

He smiled and let it go at that. Getting personal was something he religiously avoided; although right now it required considerable control to keep from talking about her. There was so much about her that filled his thoughts.

Despite his silence, she pursued her point. "Even among crooks you can find a better side, if you look hard enough."

"You mean like having somebody else commit their murders so they won't have to see the victim suffer?"

"No, I mean there's a vein of real feeling in everybody — with Sought by police for 14 hours after his employer's pretty 29-year-old wife, Mrs. Alice "Dolly" Algire was found slain in her farm home near Cornwall, Ont., Elias Meek, 21-year-old hired man on Algire farm, surrendered to police and faces murder charge. Body of attractive mother of four was found near her home, where her twin children, unaware of tragedy, were later found by relatives, whimpering and cold. Police, unable to discover motive for killing, believe death was caused by several abdominal stab wounds.

(the exception of Thorpe. Why, even his right-hand man, Robertson, objected to that wholesale blackmail racket of Thorpe's. And he's never shed any tears over human suffering, either."

Terry became suddenly attentive. "What was that? Say it again."

"Why, he thought that blackmailing those society women who lost on gambling, was too dirty and told Thorpe he wouldn't have anything to do with it. I know it sounds funny, considering all the things Robertson has done in his time. But what's so important about that?"

Terry shook his head thoughtfully. "I don't know. Nothing I can put my finger on. But it sounds like it's important. Thorpe's lieutenant going back on him. It could be that Robertson killed him because of developments from that. And it could be that whoever killed Thorpe wanted Robertson to be blamed for it; the fact that you got mixed up in it just diverted the suspicion. Also, it indicates that there was dissension in the organization. That might mean almost anything."

He sighed. His shoulders were relaxed, slightly drooped as he sat behind the wheel immersed in thought. For several minutes he drove automatically, oblivious that Kay was there beside him. Then he stiffened and snapped his fingers. Turning to Kay, there was a
