can go into a bar room and get a drink. There is a vast difference between the urban and rural population. The present law has not been in force long enough for me to give an opinion. There is no inspection of liquor: I think there should be an inspection of all liquors for sale; I think heavy bonds should be given by every man wishing to engage in the liquor business and he should be held entirely reliable for all damage.

To Dr. McLeod—I imagine a man would swear to a lie in his own interest if he thought he would not be found out. These people are those who have no means to put at stake and who take bribes to go on the stand and swear falsely. I believe the best thing we could have is prohibition but there would be a vast amount of smuggling and I think difficulty would be experienced in enforcing such a law. The people who would smuggle liquor have only to run the gauntlet and escape the revenue officers.

The shores of this Island are very easy of approach, for those who wished to smuggle. I do not remember whether there was much illicit sale under the old license law.

To Mr. Clarke—Sometimes they would go to jail, at others they would petition the Governor General and get out. There were people under the Canada Temperance Act who would buy a gallon of whiskey and sell it, and then buy another and sell that, and so on.

To Mr. McLeod—I believe there were 146 places where liquor was sold in 1879.

To Mr. Clarke—I believe the Act was repealed because the people were disgusted with the disgraceful state of affairs which had arisen under the Act. The Women's Christian Union took up the work. They did the best they could. They expended a large sum of money, and then applied to the City Council to get it back.

The Scott Act was a perfect and complete failure. I believe it was repealed conscientiously by the people. In the towns I would have high license, making the liquor dealer give a heavy bond, and try him as a criminal, for every leg that was broken or life lost. There is total liquor prohibition law in the State of Maine. Under the Canada Temperance Act the rich man could import his liquor and the poor man could not.

To Dr. McLeod.—A City Council elected by the people represents the people. The mayor represents the people. The men who went to jail for violation of the law, only represented a section of the law, only represented a section of the law.

To Judge McDonald.—In favoring prohibition I had not the slightest intention of shutting out fermented wine for sacramental purposes. The Holy Eucharist cannot be meddled with by any court or parliament on earth. That is law where God Himself is judge.

H. M. Davison, (sworn)—

To Mr. Clarke—I am city clerk. There is no Scott Act fund. All fines go into the city. The Scott Act had just been repealed when I came into office.

To Mr. Giguault—I have the complete city reports since 1885. We have not a complete file before 1885. We have copies for 1875. I cannot tell the exact amount of fines which were collected. There were a number of persons fined under the Scott Act for selling liquor illegally. I do not know whether the present law makes things better or worse.

Chas. Cameron (sworn)—To Judge McDonald—I am City Marshal for the City of Charlottetown. Have held office a little over two years. I did all I could to carry out the law. Illicit sales of liquor were going on under the Scott Act. The present liquor sellers are mostly those who were illegal sellers under the Act. The regulation act has done away with selling in back places and in grocery stores.

To Mr. Clarke—I had no hindrance in doing my duty. The council was composed of a majority not in favor of liquor traffic, and generally the force is guided by the opinion of the council. I was a Marshal on the force before I was City Marshal. The Scott Act was beneficial to some and to others it was not. I do not know of any bad room or office-drinking. Liquor was sold in grocery stores. I remember of the increase in the police force under the old license law. The cause of the increase was because there was a lot of shipping. The sailors could procure as much rum as they wished, and the rows and fights were so numerous that extra help was needed to keep order. The new law is working well. Drunkenness is steadily on the decrease since the law came into force. We do not make many arrests, because the liquor shops are all over the city and if a man wants to get drunk he can do so handy home and the police can't get them. The number of houses where liquor is sold has decreased.

To Judge Macdonald.—Some of the drunkenness under the Scott Act was due to a man going into a tavern one day and getting 25 cents worth of liquor, and next day demanding the same amount without the quarter. He generally got it to keep him from informing.

To Mr. Giguault.—There are about 75 houses in the city where liquor is sold. There is not as much liquor drunk now as 12 or 15 year ago. The people haven't got the money to buy it. It would be hard to say how many houses sold liquor under the Scott Act. In many houses the stock would be kept in a jar or in a few bottles.

OUR evening neighbor says:—During the lightning and thunder storm last Wednesday night, which was unusually severe in the eastern portion of the Island, a fourteen-year-old son of Mr. Angus E. Campbell of Dundas was struck by the deadly fluid and instantly killed. Mr. Campbell's house was badly wrecked, and he himself was knocked senseless.

Mrs. Campbell received a severe shock in the side and when her husband recovered the consciousness he discovered his wife lying prostrate with her clothing on fire, and attending to her he looked for his son, and discovered his body along-side of the lounge with the clothes partly consumed. The poor little fellow seems to have been killed in an instant. The stricken parents have the sympathy of the entire community.
