Demonstrators In Viet Nam Carry Large Share Of Power

By PETER ARNETT SAIGON (AP)—When 10,000 people demonstrate in Da Nang, it is the equivalent of 2,000,000 demonstrators marching down Fifth Avenue in New York.

In the demonstrations springing up around the country against Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's military government, less than one per cent of the population has been directly involved.

Most of South Viet Nam's population lives indifferent to politics, dodging the bullets of war and struggling to stay alive.

Nevertheless, the tiny percentage of South Vietnamese involved in the demonstrations is misleading.

The demonstrators have power far greater than their numbers would suggest.

OVERTHREW DIEM
A hard core of experienced politicians and religious figures are behind the agitation. They helped to overthrow President Ngo Dinh Diem, Gen. Nguyen Hanh and the other premiers.

The only new faces are the young students, who have been drafted into the movement to do the leg work.

In one of the high positions on the Council of Youth and Students to Safeguard the Nation is the secretary of an extremist monk named Thich Thien Minh.

Based in Saigon, Minh works out of the Buddhist Institute believed up to now to have been a moderate wing of the Buddhist hierarchy. But students from the institute have been in Saigon demonstrations recently.

Besppectacled Thich Tam Chau, the leading monk at the institute, worked actively to overthrow Diem. Joining him in that struggle was Thich Tri Quang a moody, mysterious monk who is stage-managing the demonstrations in Hue and Da Nang.

REPRESENT BUDDHISM
Together, Tam Chau and Tri Quang represent all organized Buddhism in Viet Nam.

The Buddhists have several key pagodas in Saigon and other large cities where hundreds of the faithful will gather at a moment's notice. And there are the numerous Buddhist schools and colleges filled with students eager to obey the wishes of the monks.

With these sources to draw from, the Buddhists are finding no difficulty in pulling crowds far larger than in the Buddhist demonstrations against Diem.

A Buddhist Institute meeting early Saturday drew from 7,000 to 10,000 people, all of them squatting orderly inside the institute listening to one of their favorite monk orators.

Only a handful participated in the demonstration later in the evening. There is no doubt, however, that if the monks had publicly asked them to take to the streets, all would have done so.

The anti-American aspect of the demonstrations seems to be
