ELLEN'S DIARY

Wild Strawberries Ripen In Fencerow Or Stumpland

The millstream enters a summer - guests these days, are not the ones, but the ones far from places, drawn to the outdoors as they holiday, stop to study the plants of the millstream. The sun is shining along the banks. Queen Anne's Lace heads. Seeds are interesting. Alders have put on their best crinkled leaves. And always there are the birds, notes thrading in with the sun and shade and loveliness of the day. It might be good, but down there, the younger farmer commented stopping a moment to check a fisherman who is stream this evening. "If," he added "he knows the best spots."

"It's not that I like trout for that matter, fish of any kind," one of the brotherhood of anglers stated the other day. "No, I give my catch away. But," he smiled, "do enjoy fishing! There's nothing better than a spell of it, to soothe the blues away."

"Have you fished today? And a kingfisher, a quailly hooded cat, watched a little enviously, as we thought from the telephone wire which leads in to Alderlea above the millstream.

"Yes," James observed this morning, "there should be rights have been more grain sowed on that field up there. But a shower would put a better face on it, and also lengthen the hay."

However, no cloud appeared on today's sky, in response to the wishful thinking of the old farm - folks. It remained a delicate blue, almost like that silvery at evening which sets the scene for the first star. A scented wind tidled along our valley, and a thrush, over in the woodlands, declared wild strawberries were reddenng now in fencerow and stumpland. What intriguing bird - song there is now! We gather these to memory, to have them note for note to cheer us when next the bleak winds blow. Even the sparrows give out happy twitterers these days.

A story is told of a little boy who was watching the birds in a field. At length a little songster length veil in place. She carried a bouquet of yellow and white mums.

Miss Trudy MacDonald, Halifax, friend of the bride, was a bridesmaid. She was gowned in a street length dress of pale green nylon with white accessories. She carried a smaller bouquet of yellow and white mums.

The best man was Donald Wight, brother of the groom. The ushers were Ray and Frank Murphy, brothers of the bride.

Following the wedding, a reception was held at the Queen Hotel. The bride's table was decorated with two silver candelabra and bouquets of yellow and white mums. The table was centered with a three tier wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom.

Father Wight proposed a toast to the bride and this was responded to by the groom.

Immediately following the reception the happy couple left on a honeymoon to New York. For travelling the bride wore a yellow linen suit with tan and beige accessories and a corsage of white mums.

The young couple will reside in Charlottetown.

Contest Extended

This is a message to some of the best friends good eating ever had—to contributors to former Annual Cook Book Editions of The Guardian and The Evening Patriot.

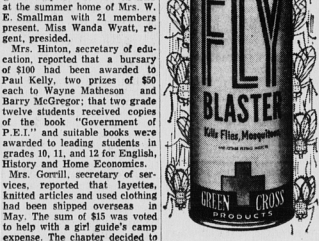

Many of you have told us you were given too short notice of the contest in connection with entries for this year's edition—that not enough time was allowed to gather together the recipes you consider most suitable for publication.

Well, we still want those recipes. They make too important a contribution to the reputation of P.E.I. as the "good-eating province" to be missed.

So the deadline is being extended until July 13.
