

Ask the Doctor...

I would like to say that I regret to inform the students of U.P.E.I. that I have learned a great lesson this week: do not try to stick a big box on the wall with a couple of thumbtacks and staples, because it will fall and hurt your big toe. Due to some technical difficulties it has become quite impossible for me to post my nice big red box in the Pit. I hope that your mail will continue, however, (send to Main 06) and that they will remain so creative.

Dear Doctor,

I seem to have a thirty inch tumour protruding from my nasal cavity and I was wondering whether or not I should be concerned over this silly growth. Should I?
Signed, Silly Tumour

Dear Silly,

Don't be foolish, a tumour never hurt anyone. As long as you have no problem breathing I can't see why this would have even occurred to you that it may be necessary to consult an expert in the field. If it cumbersome try filing it down with heavy grade sandpaper or some battery acid.

Dear Doctor,

I am sick of science students running around the campus telling Arts and Business students how much better they are than us. I really hate their condescending attitudes towards our "bird" courses and "useless" degrees. Is there any solution to this problem or am I doomed to hear poverty jokes forever?

Signed, Sick of Science Students saying that I am Stupid in Studying Subjects Fit for Sewer

Dear You,

While I am a doctor, I too have obtained an Arts degree as my foundation for learning. See where I am today. Well maybe I am not a good example, but trust me there is nothing wrong with taking something other than science. I would just like to say that I think that science is highly over-rated in its ability to ensure employment. How many scientists have you met while shopping at your local K-Mart? None, because they are all working there studying the effects of Red Light Specials on the shopping public. Ignore their silly, infantile triflings and pretend that Arts is that easy. It will make them sorry that they are science when exam time comes around.

Dear Doctor,

I am broke and was interested as to what kind of fun things that you could suggest for me to do during the break without costing ANY money.
Signed, Bored and Broke

Dear B.B.,

I can sympathize with your situation and I will provide you with my top ten list of cheap thrills. Use it wisely!

The Doctor's Top Ten List of Cheap Thrills

1. Sex
2. Having sleep deprivation with your good friends.
3. Call your good friends and have a conversation with them, but whenever you are about to say something interesting, hang up, and then pretend that you were cut off.
4. Throw snowballs at P.E.I.'s only public transit bus.
5. Study...learn...read comic books.
6. Watch T.V.
7. Play Scrabble and cheat until the person you are playing with refuses to continue and then apologize. If they resume to play, resume cheating until they take a nervous breakdown.
8. Sex
9. Chase your shadow.
10. Beg for enough money from your parents to go to Florida (or at least Moncton) and do something really fun.

Have a good break and I will see you at the beach 'round midnight. Don't forget to be naked, because I will be!
