The bidding:
East South West North
1A 4 4 Pass Pass

Opening lead—four of spades. The simplest bid is frequently the best. Once East had opened the bidding, South had to dismiss all thought of a slam, and needed only to consider the advisability of contracting directly for game without consulting partner.

With everything running for him—the probability that he would make four hearts, and the possibility the opponents might be able to get together in a minor suit if they were allowed room to talk things over at a low level—South's leap straight to game was clearly the best strategy.

Things being the way they were, it turned out the opponents had no good contract with which to compete, and all interest centered instead on the play of the hand.

The spade lead was pretty well marked as a singleton and the question was how to overcome the danger of defeat if this turned out to be the case.

If trumps were immediately drawn, South would eventually have to lose two spades and two clubs. Or if, after taking East's king of spades with the ace, the queen were led, with the intention of later ruffing two spades in dummy, West could nip this plan in the bud by ruffing the queen and returning a trump. This line of play would also result in the loss of four tricks.

Since both methods of play appeared to lead to ultimate defeat, South had to give thought to any other possible line of play which might make the contract. And having thought, he found a simple solution to the problem.

The king of spades was won with the ace and the three of spades returned. East took it and led back a trump.

South won it in his own hand and ruffed the eight of spades with dummy's jack. A diamond from dummy was ruffed by declarer, trumps were drawn, and South ended losing a spade and two clubs to make four hearts.

The solution was easy enough once it occurred to South to look for it.

Seek and ye shall find.

French To Get Emergency Aid

WASHINGTON (AP)—The French government Thursday was assured $65,250,000 in emergency aid to help bolster its shaky financial footing.

Of the total, the United States agreed to make available $27,000,000, mainly by allowing a delay in French repayment of war-time loans.

The 64-nation International Monetary Fund agreed to make available $131,250,000 of its resources.

The European Payments Union promised to extend $250,000,000 in credits to help France in trading with her European partners. This union has an agreement whereby the unfavorable trade balance of one member country can be applied to the favorable balance of another.

The aid package was announced jointly by the French and U.S. governments, the Monetary Fund and the Payments Union.
