THE DAILY EXAMINER.

JULY 25, 1890.

The British Empire.

Up to a few weeks ago, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, the British Empire comprised an area of a little more than 9,000,000 square miles, or a small fraction in excess of the dimensions of the domain over which is extended the sway of the czar. To-day British territory reaches an area exceeding 11,000,000 square miles. The treaty with Germany, by which the British "sphere of influence" extends from the eastern coast of Africa at Zanzibar as far back as the great lakes, and from the first degree of south latitude to the southern boundary at Egypt, exclusive of the Congo Free State and the region over which Italy presumes to exercise a sort of protectorate, adds about 2,000,000 square miles to the domain of the queen of England and empress of India, and puts that potentate well in advance of Alexander III. in the game of territorial acquisition.

It is only when a comparison is made with some of the great states of Europe and of the western hemisphere that the enormous dimensions of the British empire can be appreciated. The extent of European Russia is slightly in excess of 2,000,000 square miles, that of Brazil is about 3,000,000, while the United States, including Alaska, is about 3,600,000 square miles. China is still larger than any of the nations last mentioned, having an area exceeding that of the United States by nearly 500,000 square miles. But the British empire, within its new and enlarged boundaries, is three times as capacious as the United States. Out of that domain could be carved a territory as large as this country, Brazil and China combined, leaving enough over to make up two or three little states like France, Germany or Austria. The empire of course is not as homogeneous as any of the nations mentioned, and the ties which binds its widely separated branches together are far looser and more shadowy than those which hold the vast possessions of Russia in allegiance to the Muscovite. Yet the domain over which Victoria rules in theory at least is vastly broader than that over which Alexander exercised supremacy, and is more widely extended and diversified than the world of civilized, semi-civilized and barbarous states which in the days of Julius and Augustus acknowledged allegiance to Rome.

The Experimental Farm.

Referring to the Patriot's article in disparagement of the Experimental Farm for the Maritime Provinces, published as a reply to an article which previously appeared in THE EXAMINER, the Empire says:—

"The one for the Maritime Provinces is shown to be of value to all these provinces. In order to get a central site, both for convenience and the practical use of the experiments made, the farm was established at Nappan, Nova Scotia, near the boundary of New Brunswick, and close to the strait which divides Prince Edward Island from the mainland. It is, therefore, confidently expected that the results reached at the farm will apply with equal value to all three provinces. An Opposition organ questions the use of the farm to the Island; asserts that no one will ever visit it, and that the bulletins sent out are not read. That is the criticism born of dreary pessimism and inertia. It indicates a policy that has kept the Opposition out of the control of affairs and will continue to keep them there. Farmers, more perhaps than other people, appreciate vigorous work, enterprising enquiry and new ideas. Mere whining simply drives them into another camp. Prince Edward Island will use the farm as its sister provinces do. The experiments undertaken there are meant to demonstrate the products best adapted to the climate of that part of the country, and the farmers of the locality are hardly likely to despise information of that sort. It is pointed out by a visitor to this particular farm that the Islanders, besides benefitting their crops, can learn from its management the better dyking of the marsh lands, which yield a fair return for their cost.

"This is just a part of the work being pushed forward by the administration with a view to aiding the agricultural interest. Farmers are asked to condemn practical men with a progressive policy, and turn to others who criticize without doing anything. They are not likely to heed such appeals."

Literary Note.

At the time of General Fremont's death he was engaged upon the manuscript of a paper for The Century's forthcoming series on the California Gold Hunters. It was to be entitled "Finding Paths to California," and was not only to deal with the several exploring expeditions, but to narrate the writer's intimate connection with the events which led to the conquest and occupation of the territory. The work will be promptly continued by Mrs. Fremont. A first draft of the article had been made, and the subject had been so recently and closely discussed by General and Mrs. Fremont that she will have no trouble in completing the manuscript, for which she had already written an introduction, as well as a supplement describing her life at Monterey in 1849. A fine portrait of General Fremont, from a daguerrotype of '49 or '50, will appear in the September number of The Century, along with portraits of Commodores Sloat and Stockton, "Duke" Gwin, and Governor Burnett, in an article giving account of "How California Came into the Union."

News Notes.

It is reported from San Francisco that the tin mines at San Jacinto show wonderful richness.

One hundred and twenty-five agrarian outrages were committed in Ireland during the last quarter.

Three Malta newspaper proprietors have been excommunicated for publishing articles abusing the pope and the bishop of Malta.

Leading Liverpool importers of provisions held a meeting to consider the fraudulent practice of palming off American cheese as Canadian.

The Canadian Pacific Company issued in London yesterday £1,000,000 sterling four per cent. debentures, of which £720,000 is intended to be aplied to the Pacific steamship service.

Mr. Carnegie's article, in which he said that college men did not make good business men, was published in pamphlet form, and 50,000 copies were sold, while only 1,000 copies of the replies thereto found purchasers. Mr. Carnegie's opinion, erroneous though it may be, is the popular one, probably because the college graduates are greatly outnumbered by their fellow-citizens who like to be told that the part of education they have missed is of no value.

Odds and Ends.

A women is never so badly in love that she does not try to find out the cost of her engagement ring.

"You began life as clerk, did you not?" Merchant—"No sir; I began life as a king. I was the first baby."

Dr. Olanus, a distinguished German physician, who was for many years a vegetarian, has returned to the use of meat as food, alleging that under an exclusive vegetable diet his arteries had begun to degenerate.

She—It will be a pleasure for me to share your troubles and anxieties. He—but I haven't any. She— Oh, you will have when we are married.

A sight for Gods and Men—Judge—And so he called you a liar? Prisoner—He did, sor. Judge—And did you attempt to defend yourself? Prisoner—Did I? You ought to see Duffy.

"Lemonade and buttermilk are as good as anything drinkable that you can find for this weather," said a Cincinnati physician recently. "They both are great things to quench thirst. They both act as a pleasant tonic to the stomach and they have a stimulating quality, But they should not be drank ice cold—that is, bits of ice should not be found in the goblet. Let them be as cold as the ice chest or refrigerator can make them, but not more than that."
