End Of Political Truce Is Expected This Month

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP)—The political truce of sorts which has prevailed since the mid-June election is reaching the breaking point and is likely to be over by mid-August, Parliament Hill observers feel.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker called for the truce—a cooling off period—when he announced after the June 18 election that the government faced a financial crisis and Canada would have to pull in its belt.

Opposition party leaders never were ready to agree to a truce, but since then the government has been generally so quiet and unprovocative in its actions and announcements that there has been little new fodder for the political mill.

Liberal Leader Pearson said last week he thought the country had had sufficient time to cool off from the heat of political battle, and that the country should go ahead with the task of rebuilding confidence in government. His way of doing so, naturally, would be to have a new election and elect a Liberal government

PLANS STATEMENT

At almost the same moment, Prime Minister Diefenbaker was telling reporters at his home that he plans a number of announcements in the near future, indicating that one of them would be a progress statement on the effectiveness of the austerity program. It is designed to restore confidence in the Canadian dollar and reduce Canada's international balance of payments deficit.

After several weeks of lack of any important news from the prime minister, his interview—given from his bed, where his broken left ankle is on the mend—appeared to have the effect of promising more activity in future.

The government, having suffered near defeat at the polls and confronted with the political reproaches resulting from the austerity program, now is expected by its supporters to come out of its corner fighting.

REORGANIZE CABINET

Reorganization of the cabinet following defeat of five of its ministers, and the formulation of a legislative program for the first session of the new Parliament designed to foster national development in such a way that opposition parties will be round to support it, are reported to be the cornerstones of the government's planning.

The cabinet changes are to be announced Thursday.

Mr. Diefenbaker, widely regarded as a shrewd political tactician, recalled at his press conference last week that it was after a similar period of confinement to his home in January, 1958, that he hit upon the plan of attack on the Liberal opposition and the program that brought his minority government back to sweeping power in the 1958 general election.

Kremlin Avoids Cancer Dispute

MOSCOW (Reuters)—The Soviet Communist party leadership has announced publicly its refusal to take sides in a bitter dispute on a purported new method of alleviating cancer.

In a statement published in the party newspaper Pravda, which devoted nearly a full page to the clash, the party Central Committee said it could not "take upon itself the role or arbiter in approving methods of treatment."

The statement was followed by a letter to the Central Committee from nine Leningrad writers and journalists, appealing to it to rescind immediately a June health ministry decree ordering a halt to tests on 36 hopeless cancer patients.

The letter maintained that a five-month trial of methods developed by a man named A. T. Kachugin had shown that many "hopeless people, suffering severely, were rid of pain, their general condition improved, and there appeared a real hope of recovery."

It claimed that the deputy health minister, I. G. Kochergin, has been forced to admit that the treatment—carried out with preparations named as semicarbazide hydrochloride and cadmium iodine—had a definite effect on cancer symptoms.

A long statement, signed by Kochergin; Professor Nikolai Blokhin, chairman of the recent world cancer congress here, and 14 other leaders of Soviet traditional medicine maintained the tests had shown that the method, developed by a man without doctor's qualifications, was useless and even harmful.

Nehru Unwell, Hates To Quit

By HENRY S. BRADSHER

NEW DELHI (AP) — "Nehru has not yet disappeared. It is a silly question (to ask what will happen after him.)"

The speaker: Hawaharlal Nehru.

The 72-year-old prime minister gets annoyed when people wonder aloud about the end of the Nehru era.

This era has encompassed all 15 years of independence for this vast nation with 454,000,000 inhabitants. Nehru has moulded the nation and strongly influenced its people.

Despite his displeasure there is increasing talk of the era's end because of the illness that has plagued Nehru more than four months.

Nehru looks like a tired, sick shell of the man who once bounded up staircases and charged into crowds of affectionate followers. His illness has not been defined but it seems to involve an infection of the urinary tract.

If he heeds his doctors, this autocratic democrat must loosen his grip on every aspect of Indian life. But Nehru sees many things still to do and feels he alone can do them.

He wants to insure economic development to raise his people from an average annual income of $77 a person. The problem is so vast that even if all internal straining and foreign borrowing succeed until 1967, the then 623,000,000 persons in India will have an income of only $113 apiece.

Nehru also is disheartened by the failure of India and Communist China to establish friendship. He does not want to leave a bitter border dispute.

One leading contender to succeed Nehru is Morarji R. Desai, 66, the craggy and abstemious finance minister. He is formally No. 2 in the government.

The prime minister has given Desai significant praise, possibly to offset the efforts of V. K. Krishna Menon to build up a separate, dynamic image of himself.

Krishna Menon stands to the left, Desai to the right of the dominant Congress Party. Two factions could cancel each other out and let in a compromise replacement for Nehru.

This could be Home Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri, 58, meek-looking but a skillful politician.

Or it could be Nehru's strong-willed only child, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, 46.

Some observers feel she would only be a Nehru name in front of someone else, like Sjstri or maybe Krishna Menon.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Sylvia hadn't the vaguest idea about proper opening leads when she started to play at the club. She had become a member shortly before the regulation was finally passed requiring applicants to meet a certain minimum standard of skill, and this was undoubtedly fortunate for Sylvia, because she would never have made the grade otherwise.

Of course, Sylvia was also deficient in many other areas of the game when she began to play, and it is hardly surprising that her partners in the expert game, in which she insisted on playing, told her so in no uncertain terms.

Despite her shortcomings, Sylvia did succeed in adding some life to the game with her exceptionally peculiar ideas about bidding and play. Her saving virtue, before she eventually became a good player, was that she would occasionally score some extraordinary triumph by reason of her peculiar approach to the play of a hand, and this, in turn, would cause the membership to buzz with admiration over her unprecedented feats.

Look at this hand, which occurred early in her career. She had just finished playing the preceding rubber with South, one of the club's finest players, and he had not yet recovered from the shattering experience when this hand was dealt.

Sylvia was West and had to lead against four hearts. Most players would probably have led the ten of diamonds with her hand, but Sylvia had not yet been taught the advantage of the top of a sequence lead.

For some reason impossible to explain, Sylvia led the jack of clubs! With any lead but a club South would have romped home with thirteen tricks, but against this inspired lead South found that he had bitten off more than he could chew.

He covered the jack with the queen and East took the king and returned a club. Sylvia cashed the A - 9, and then, apparently not realizing that the deuce of clubs was the only club left, led it. East ruffed with the jack of hearts and poor, unfortunate South found that he had to lose a heart trick and go down one!
