ing operations but suffering from low levels of blood oxygen. Therapeutic treatments may benefit such conditions as heart trouble, carbon monoxide poisoning, certain lung infections, gastro-intestinal problems and blood vessel diseases of the legs. Four infants who underwent surgery were too ill, by previous standards, for corrective operations. Two, whose hearts were mended in October and November, 1962, have been discharged from the hospital and are at their homes.

One of the four died two days after surgery from unrelated complications, doctors said. One died from heart failure several hours after the operation. The research was under the general direction of Dr. Robert E. Gross, professor of children's surgery at Harvard medical school and surgeon-in-chief at the Children's Hospital Dr. William F. Bernhard, clinical associate in surgery at Harvard and associate surgeon at the hospital, was in direct charge of the project.

A large part of Canadian secondary industry — especially those sections that would be hurt in the contemplated readjustments—takes a dim view of such suggestions.

Babies Hearts Lensed
Using New Technique

BOSTON (AP) — Boston surgeons, working in a submarine-like tank under oxygen pressures up to 55 pounds a square inch, have mended tiny babies' hearts formerly thought beyond repair. The operations were described as a first in American medical history. They were planned to increase oxygen absorption by babies whose hearts worked to improve hearts failing to circulate enough blood through the lungs.
