as you. A fish isn't yours until you catch it. He doesn't rob you," declared Teeter.
 "He catches the fish I would catch if he didn't. Anyway these are my fishing waters," retorted Grandpa Pelican. He sounded cross. But perhaps that was because he hasn't a pleasant voice.
 "I wonder to whom the fish would say they belong," tittered the little Sandpiper. "Perhaps Plunger thinks you catch his fish," he added.
 "Well, I don't. I don't go up north in his fishing waters, but he does come down in mine," declared Grandpa Pelican harshly. It was plain that he was disgruntled.

CRESCENT CARNIVAL

By FRANCES PARKISON KEYES

The Fontaines themselves are well aware of his aggressive suit for Estelle's hand. Indeed they made it a pretext for pressing the courtship of their son Marcel, with many expressions indicating that they were as much scandalized by young Mr. Breckenridge as we were. Yet Marcel and Estelle returned from their wedding journey to find him an inmate of the Fontaines' house, and the match between him and Aurore already as good as made. It appears that we had been somewhat mistaken in assuming that Mr. Breckenridge was on the verge of bankruptcy; if you will permit me to say so, I think you might have been more enlightening regarding the state of his plantation, which, so it seems, is highly productive. Moreover, he has had another successful season at the races, where the progeny of his first winner, Supremus, have now begun to appear; and his connection with the Lottery has proven more profitable than ever this year.

Canoe Cove School Enjoys Valentine Party

On St. Valentine's Day the teacher and pupils of Canoe Cove School entertained friends at a Valentine Party in the school room. After the guests arrived everyone joined in an old fashioned game, "Land, Sea and Air," which was greatly enjoyed. The students then sang "Alouette."
 Charles MacKinnon passed numbered squares to each guest and Kathleen and Sadie MacFadyen and Elsie Hickox took various kinds of hearts from the Heart Tree, and those with corresponding numbers found their fortunes on the hearts delivered by Charles MacKinnon and Delbert Muirhead.
 After singing a Valentine Song the senior students opened a prettily decorated Valentine Box and postmen delivered valentines to everyone.
 A cosy social time was enjoyed as teacher and students departed for home all were unanimous in their expression of pleasure in a pleasant school party.
 The visitors were—Mrs. Anne MacRae, Mrs. Francis MacDougall, Mrs. Harold MacKinnon, and Harry, Mrs. Mack MacFadyen, Mrs. Howard Muirhead, Mrs. Roy MacPhee, Mrs. Dan MacPhee and Cherry and Donna, Mrs. Sandie MacKinnon, Mrs. Dan MacLean, Mrs. Duncan MacCannell and Lillian Jane, Mrs. A. G. MacKinnon Dennis and Susan, Mrs. W. MacInnon and Kathy and Allan, and Mrs. M. B. MacKinnon and Master Llyod MacNevin.

unforgettable ministry of the late Rev. John Goodwill.
 The late Mr. MacDougall was firm, staunch, true, and steadfast to the church in which he was so richly blessed throughout his years, departing at no time from the faith once delivered to the saints, and was one of the charter members in organizing a Church of Scotland congregation in Cambridge, Mass., in which congregation he laboured zealously to the glory of God and to the salvation of souls as an elder. Many of this congregation, and in P. E. I. have been comforted and strengthened by his kindness, wise counsel, and fervent prayers.
 The late Mr. MacDougall was twice married, first to Kate MacPhee of Canoe Cove, P. E. I., and second to Leona Seals of Nova Scotia. To the first marriage there were five children, four daughters and one son. Two daughters, Margaret, Mrs. W. W. Anderson of Lynnfield, Mass., and Ida, Mrs. Earl MacKenzie of Long Creek, P. E. I., survive the passing of their father. Besides the widow and two daughters to mourn, there are six grandchildren.
 The funeral which was largely attended was held at the Kirk-Cambridge, Mass. Rev. Albert McTory, who visited him during his illness, conducting the services.
 Interment was in Mount Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge, Mass.

MOORE & McLEOD Limited

When we attempted to protest to the Fontaines over the inconsistency of the course they were pursuing with Aurore, they somewhat satirically informed us that since we were mistaken regarding the financial status of Mr. Breckenridge, we might well have misjudged him in other ways; and that however this may be, they were not in the least ashamed of any of the sources of their fortune. Since the fortune of the Fontaines was so radiant and since their daughter was so radiantly happy, I should not myself have applied the word radiant to Aurore; arrogant would better describe it. She acts as if she had carried off the greatest prize in the South, and talks insolently of her plans for playing the chateau at Splendida, and for becoming the most outstanding hostess in New Orleans. She also makes a parade of her unbridled infatuation for her fiance, unseemly to the last degree in a girl of good family and good breeding. His manner, which has always been mocking, has now become insulting, and it offends me even to think of him. The two sisters are to be married, in the very near future, at a double marriage ceremony.

I cannot be altogether regretful that Estelle's mourning will preclude her from appearing at this function, about which all New Orleans will soon be chattering as if it were the most important event in the world.

This long letter can hardly give you pleasure in any part, my dear Alzire, and I am certain that you realize that I write it with pain. But I feel I owe you an explanation, as well as an apology, for my long silence. And I feel, too, that you will understand our depression and anxiety, and support us with your sympathy.

Always affectionately your cousin,
 Charlotte Lenoir-Provosty

A FRIGHTFUL DISASTER AT SEA

A thrill of horror and of pity pervaded this city yesterday, when the news of the sinking of the transatlantic steamer La Bourgogne was received, and the information spread that six hundred souls had found a watery grave, in less than a quarter of an hour after the terrible collision with the English vessel Cromatysire, the details of which are given in the telegraphic columns of The Picayune.

Through the loss of their elder daughter, nee Aurore Fontaine, their prominent son-in-law, Andrew Breckenridge, and their two little granddaughters, Pauline and Angela, the Fontaine family has been cruelly bereaved.

Mr. and Mrs. Breckenridge left New Orleans about ten days ago with the former's son by a previous marriage, Andrew Breckenridge Jr., and their two little daughters. Their first destination was New York City, where they took passage aboard the Bourgogne to enjoy their annual Continental tour. Andrew Breckenridge Jr. attended the embarkment of his parents and sisters, but did not accompany them, as he planned to spend the summer in New England with relatives of his own mother. He is expected to arrive in this city today or tomorrow.

Mr. Andrew Breckenridge was long an outstanding figure in New Orleans. He was the owner of the magnificent plantation Splendida, in Iberville Parish, where he maintained a fine stud, stable and race track, and where he raised Supremus and other horses which brought him fame as a breeder and sportsman. He also owned a fine property on Prytania Street, which, since his marriage to the former Aurore Fontaine, was a brilliant social centre. Through his first wife, the late Anne Forrestal, he was connected with both the Northern and Southern branches of that prominent family. He was a member of the Jockey Club, the Southern Yacht Club and the Boston Club. His loss will be deeply

IN MEMORIAM

GEORGE MacDOUGALL

The sands of time are slowly passing through the hour glass, but passing they are and sure. Another of God's servants has passed on to his reward, purchased by Christ on Calvary, leaving his many friends in Prince Edward Island and in Cambridge, Mass. with wonderful memories of his Christian life and character, and with saddened hearts.

The late George MacDougall, son of the late Colin and Mary Campbell MacDougall was born in Argyllshire, P. E. I., and in early manhood moved to Cambridge, Mass., where he carried on for many years, a successful grocery business.

The late Mr. MacDougall, who passed to his rest on Feb. 1st, 1951, after a month's illness, in his 81st year, was brought to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, during what is known as the Third Revival so richly experienced by the Church of Scotland in P. E. I., under the
