Mathematical Congress Holding Seminar Here

Prince of Wales College opens its doors today to High School and College mathematics teachers from the four Atlantic Provinces who will participate in the fourth of a series of summer seminars organized by the Canadian Mathematical Congress. Here under most pleasant surroundings these teachers will have an opportunity to broaden their mathematical backgrounds, and to have stimulating contacts with several Canadian mathematicians. Instructors include Professor Norman Miller of Queens University, Kingston; Dr. Gordon Pall of the Illinois Institute of Technology, Chicago; David Haley from Acadia University, Wolfville, N.S.; D.B. Sumner, MacMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario and L.P. Edwards from the University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, N.B.

ORGANIZED IN 1945

The Congress was organized in 1945. The idea developed in the minds of Professor W. L. G. Williams, a teacher at McGill University, that Canadian mathematics instructors should have a congress of their own. Professor Williams organized the congress with the assistance of Dr. Pall, who was then at Queens, and several other Canadians.

The Congress is supported by contributions from Canadian industrial concerns, by fees from its members, and to a lesser degree by contributions from the Federal in a remarkable way, Dr. Pall told The Guardian last night. It has brought Canadian mathematicians together, enabling them to get to know each other to exchange ideas and to work more effectively because of the interchange of ideas.

The Congress sponsors a summer research institute at Kingston, Ontario each year. Those who attend engage in mathematical research for several weeks.

NOTEWORTHY ACHIEVEMENT

Before that Canadian mathematicians were usually members of various American mathematical groups, and had little recognition for themselves. Today, through a widely known and highly regarded mathematical journal, through several national congresses in which important mathematicians (Canadian and from the world over) have participated, and summer seminars and research institutes, Canadians have become a force in themselves in the world development of mathematics, and have among themselves a sense of solidarity and accomplishment.

The Maritime Provinces have produced several mathematicians of note both in the Canadian and American scene.

The fourth quadrennial meeting of the Canadian Mathematical Congress will be held this August in Edmonton and Banff. Previous congresses were held in Montreal, Vancouver and Kingston. doubtless, these activities have helped to keep in Canada many young mathematicians who might have gone elsewhere, and to bring to us some from other countries.

Courses being conducted here are in Algebra, "New Look" Algebra, Analytic Geometry, Calculus (elementary and advanced), and introductory courses in Statistics, Finite Mathematics and Number Theory.

For the president and the first lady it was a day of personal memories of their marriage in Denver in 1916, just a year after Eisenhower's graduation from West Point as a young second lieutenant.

W. I. To Hear Civil Defence Co-Ordinator

if an enemy attacked would you know what to do?

Have you thought of emergency food supplies, first-aid kit, and other essentials to safety in time of disaster?

The above and many other questions will be answered by Major General E.S. Hatton, Deputy Co-ordinator of Civil Defence for Canada, when he will speak to the fourty-fourth annual convention of the Prince Edward Island Women's Institutes on Wednesday evening July 3rd.

Major General Hatton is a native of Peterborough, Ontario, and has had more than thirty years military experience in engineering and administration, previous to his appointment in 1955 as Deputy Co-ordinator of Civil Defence.

General Hatton has studied Civil Defence since 1939 and, in 1940-41, had pratical experience during the German attacks on Alexandria, Egypt, which led to a major temporary evacuation of that city. When in 1949, the first British postwar Civil Defence operation "Exercise Britannia" was being prepared, he was selected by the army to co-operate with Sir John Hodsoll, then British Civil Defence Chief, in its production. He was also responsible for the folllow-up operation, "Exercise Southern Siren."

General Hatton continued to study atomic warfare and to direct Civil Defence exercises for the Continental allies. He took part in pratically all the major atomic studies conducted at Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers in Europe, and attended conferences at the Civil Defence College in the United Kingdom. He worked in close collaboration with Sir John Hodsell, Senior Civil Defence Adviser, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and with General Sir Sidney Kirkman, Britains' Commander-in-chief of Civil Defence.

The public is invited to attend this session and it is hoped that all those interested in Civil Denence work will take advantage of this opportunity to hear more about Civil Defence.

Red China's Trade Figures Are Forecast

PEIPING (Reuters) — China's total volume of foreign trade planned for 1957 is approximately 91.6 per cent of the 1956 figure, it was revealed Monday by the chairman of the national economic commission, Po I Po.

In his report to the National People's Congress on the draft plan for 1957, no over-all figures were given.

Po said 540,000 tons less grain and 85,000 tons less pork would be exported this year.

Grain exports this year would be 1,900,000 tons and pork 77,000 tons.

"In import plans, major reductions have been made in the amount of general machinery and transport equipment, to provide incentive to our own machine building industry."

The proportion of agricultural produce exported gradually would drop, Po said, while proportion of minerals and other industrial products exported would rise.

RECORD HARVEST

With a record wheat harvest already in hand and generally good conditions for other major crops, China would produce 191,000,000 tons of grain this year unless there was unusually bad weather.

Po said China now could make her own power stations, mining equipment, and many other heavy and light industrial requirements.

The new plan is much less ambitious than some earlier ones, and observers saw it as a measure of marking time and consolidation after last year's too-hurried progress.

In one of the most outspoken comments yet on the population problem by a Chinese leader, Po said the reason more materials could not be provided for light industry is "the area of our arable land has increased very little while our population is increasing fast.

"Though output of grain has increased it is still not enough to satisfy our increased requirements, so we cannot afford to expand area for industrial crops on our existing farms."
