

fit, (if the Society be now properly supported,) in a few years will be a hundred-fold greater.

It now remains with you—the great body of the Farmers of this Island—to say, whether this Institution, so auspiciously commenced, shall continue directing its energies to the spreading information, the improvement of your cultivation, the bettering your stock, the seeking out new avenues for the disposal of your surplus produce, and to the encouraging all those branches of rural economy, in the success of which you are so deeply interested; or whether, by withholding the trifling subscriptions solicited, you will deprive it of the means of serving you. Some will yet say, the Society has done no good. Others will warmly acknowledge its benefits, and say the same thing when it was first commenced? It has done no good so much as you expected. Difficulties are always to be overcome. Ask yourselves whether your own prejudices, or mistrust of its wish and power to serve you, did not, for the first one or two years, prevent many from listening to its advice, or availing themselves of the benefits it sought to confer? By becoming members, you really save money. What Farmer is there, who, in the year, does not expend Twenty Shillings for seeds, implements, &c. At the Society's Store in Town, and the different Branches and Depot persons, who are not Subscribers, pay Twenty-five per cent, or one-fourth more for seeds, plough mounting, &c. than members pay. For instance, suppose a person, who is a member, goes to the Society's Store, and pays the amount to Twenty Shillings, if he had been a Subscriber, he would pay for these seeds, &c. only Fifteen Shillings, instead of Twenty Shillings. The payment of Three Shillings annually, in the sum of a member, so that, in buying this Twenty Shillings worth of seed, you not only save the Three Shillings subscribed, but actually put Two Shillings clear profit in your pocket. But, that you do not become members for considerations more elevated than the saving of the paltry sum of a few Shillings. We ask you to join the Society, because, by doing so, you give moral weight and influence to the efforts of those who are striving to improve the condition of the Country. Because, by doing so, you assist in supporting institutions which diffuse useful knowledge among you, which awaken the mind to be active and industrious, which give you mind which God has given man, not to lie dormant, but to be used in pursuing his varied avocations. Institutions which, by their prizes, meetings, discussions, and also the Branches and Depot persons, who are bringing mind into contact with mind, and thus, not only making the experience of each contribute to the general stock for the benefit of all, but impelling all to recollect how inferior are the seeds, &c. which are used, which are sure to enlighten and reward all who study and follow their counsels, which seek to store the minds of your sons with knowledge to become (what should be the parents' wish) better Farmers and more enlightened men in their fathers. It is on such grounds, that we solicit you, not in tens, twenties, or in hundreds, but en masse, to join the parent Society, or the Societies in your Districts. Let it no longer be an exception to the rule; but let it be considered a reproach to be told you are not a Member of an Agricultural Society.

To those individuals who have hitherto patronized the Society by such a moderate sum, we are desirous that you cannot expect the continuance of such great liberality, we feel confident no appeal is necessary to induce you still to continue liberal contributions to our cause. Aware as we are, that the necessary and evolution proceed in Scottish Husbandry by the Highland Society, and of the improvement effected in England and other countries by Agricultural Associations, we need not point out to you the importance of such institutions; nor do we suppose, you would have assisted the Society so largely at first, if you intended to desert it now. But let all classes recollect how inferior are the seeds, &c. which are used, and how their property are linked together. The Proprietor, the man of man, the Merchant, the Professional man, and the Mechanic are all deeply interested in Agricultural improvement; well regulated industry is not antagonistic in its principles, but is a partnership concern; the rich man and his less wealthy neighbour, each have their allotted parts, and are indispensably necessary to each other, by his labour and skill produces the one the other with his capital, assists the producer, or opens avenues for the disposal of his produce; and therefore, in agricultural countries, the tillage of the soil is the foundation on which all other interests principally depend. Let prosperity attend the farmers exertion and all other interests are enhanced; let calamity overtake him, and all other interests are correspondingly depressed.

Dr. The Royal Agricultural Society in Account with George Beer, Secretary and Treasurer.

We therefore, earnestly solicit all classes to assist in supporting this Society, and while subscribing, do not forget, that a Five Pound subscription is felt as little by many, as Five Shillings by the poor farmer who tills the plough; to whom, in concluding, we fear this is a roughly reported, we again say, be diligent in collecting and saving manure, raise Turnips for your Stock, keep your cattle warm in winter, adopt proper rotations, and become a Member of an Agricultural Society, you will then have done your part, and may safely trust to a generous soil, and kind providence for the rest.
