Mr. Parnell as a Witness.

(G. W. S. cable to the New York Tribune.)

Mr. Parnell seems likely to add to his other distinctions that of being a good witness. There is judicial authority for speaking well of his performance to-day under cross-examination. Since the commission adjourned, I have met a judge of great distinction, who has been present in court. There could be no better witness, said this judge, whose testimony came spontaneously without a question. The attorney-general, on the other hand, does not seem to have spent a happy day. His cross-examination was well under way by noon, when I came in. First impressions count for something, and I thought things were not looking well for him and his party. As he was putting a question, his voice, always rather loud for this room, was louder than ever. He had lost his usual cheery coolness of manner; his face looked hot, and the roll of paper in his hand was slapping the shelf in front with too much emphasis. I heard afterwards that he had opened his cross-examination with some mistakes about the Cian-na-Gael which had set the people laughing and provoked Sir Charles Russell into something like a sneer.

There was an audience before whom nobody would care to make more mistakes than he could help. Lady Coleridge, Lady Harcourt, Mrs. Peel, the Speaker's wife, and Miss Peel, Archbishop Walsh, and a score of other notabilities sat looking and listening. There was, however, no such crowd in the court or in the corridors outside as during the fortnight of the forged letters.

IF PARNELL SHOULD BREAK DOWN in the witness-box, it would be a disaster which would blot out the memory of his triumph about the letters. Yet somehow the public interest at this most critical, perhaps, decisive, moment of the inquiry is less than then. Audience or no audience, Mr. Parnell's composure was such that the spectator who knew nothing of what had gone before might well imagine that the issue was no great matter. He was seated when I first saw him. The judges are merciful, and do not keep a witness on his legs while the attorney-general is reading out his interminable extracts from Patrick Ford's prolific pen. When the question, based on Mr. Ford's article, is at last put, Mr. Parnell rises. He is in black, nothing white visible but two triangular ends of a turned down collar and a pearl scarf-pin in a black satin scarf. The black frock coat, thrown open, shows a heavy double gold chain with gold pencil pendant from it. The figure is slender and upright. When its owner chooses, his face is the face of a man whose enthusiasm for his ends is held in check by a most temperate judgment in its use of means; the face of a man with a soul all aflame and a brain all ice. He stands not quite erect, the right hand leaning on the box, his head generally a little bent to the left. There is to-day in these pale cheeks some faint trace of color. His voice is low in tone, firm, smooth, and altogether conversational. The words have to make their way as best they can out through the half opened lips, and then through the meshes of a soft brown moustache. The composure of his manner is perfect. The more the attorney-general storms, the calmer grows Mr. Parnell. From the beginning to the end of the day there is never a sign of excitement in the Irish leader. His face never flushes, his pulse never quickens, his brain does its work in a temperature that is invariable.

IF THIS BE A DUEL

between the attorney-general and Mr. Parnell, there can be no question who gets the best of it thus far. Sir Richard Webster's boisterous impetuosity is no match for Mr. Parnell's cool suavity of demeanor. It is not so much that Sir Richard has taken the wrong line as that he cannot make up his mind what line to take; he has not thought it out beforehand. He is civil one moment, peremptory the next. He blusters and hammers out his question; he would dominate if he could. He addresses Mr. Parnell in a tone unpleasantly suggestive of the Old Bailey. He launches at him what are meant for bitter sarcasms. He cannot resolve whether to treat Mr. Parnell from the Times' point of view as a criminal steeped to the lips in treason and outrage, or as the leader of a great movement whom half of America regard as a hero and statesman. Little does it matter to Mr. Parnell. He meets the taunts, storms, civilities, whatever Sir Richard has to offer, with the same impassive, imperturbable, polite indifference. He never retorts; he never seems to care to take advantage of the many openings in the attorney-general's fence, save when some serious point is to be made. When he has made it, when he has delivered a decisive answer, when all the rest of the court sees his success, Mr. Parnell alone seems totally unaware of it. No smile of triumph, no expression of delight in his enemy's discomfiture, is ever visible. It is not that his face is incapable of expressing emotion; it can express many things—it does express what he chooses it should and no more, except once or twice when Sir Richard goes off on a wrong scent and comes to grief. Then the pale, thoughtful face relaxes into an amused and irrepressible smile. Not even then does it lose that expression which is stamped most strongly on it—an expression of incessant intellectual activity, of un-sleeping vigilance, an expression belonging to one whose mind is working at high pressure.

HE HAS COMPLETE CONTROL OVER THESE SCULPTURED FEATURES;

his deep, glowing eyes he cannot completely control. A dangerous light comes into them now and then. If Sir Richard were wise he would watch for it, but to-day Sir Richard is not altogether wise. He has fared little better with the substance of his case than in his manner. All day long he has tried his best, in many different ways to connect Mr. Parnell with the physical force party; to identify him in America with Mr. Ford, in Ireland with Mr. Devoy. He has struggled hard with that too famous "last link" speech in Cincinnati. Be the truth what it may, the attorney-general's efforts to elicit what he wants have had but sorry luck. Mr. Parnell's treatment of the Cincinnati incident is a good example of his more serious style, when he feels himself at bay. I abridge question and answer:

"You heard this passage read yesterday?"

"Yes."

"You told my friend, Mr. Asquith, that if you said you would never be content till the last link between England and Ireland was destroyed you might have used qualifying words—what were they?"

Mr. Parnell's face was queer, perhaps one shade paler. His hand closed on the oak edge of the box till the muscles and veins stood out. His eyes glittered and gleamed. Suddenly his hand loosed its hold; the stooping figure stood erect as he murmured in his colloquial tone:

"Will you read the shorthand report of what I said yesterday?"

It was unusual, but Mr. Attorney could not well refuse, and when he had read it Mr. Parnell answered:

"I abide by that. I have nothing to add or alter."

The attorney-general pressed him, but vainly, and when he had done his best or his worst, matters stood very much as they did before. That Cincinnati speech was thought as likely as anything else to wreck Mr. Parnell in deep water; but he is still afloat. Mr. Justice Hannen's face showed how gravely he thought it, and he followed the explanation attentively. He is not to be suspected of sympathies one way or the other, but Mr. Parnell has made such an impression on this austere judge that when the incident was over Sir James looked relieved, or some of us thought he did. The struggle, if struggle it be, goes on to-morrow, probably for many to-morrows. What many of them may bring forth I know not, I predict not, and I shall see no more of them; but I know what Mr. Parnell's advisers think. They are delighted with him as a witness. "If he had a bad case," said one of these gentlemen, "the attorney-general could not touch him; he would meet Sir Charles Russell himself on even terms. But the truth is," continued my friend, "he has kept himself clear of whatever is compromising in the Irish movement. Whatever happens to some of his colleagues, Mr. Parnell will come out all right." With that I end, for it is the opinion of a man who knows the truth perhaps better than anybody but Mr. Parnell himself, and it is his real opinion.

DIED.

At the residence of her mother, in Gaspareaux, on Feb. 21st, 1889, of consumption, Miss Lucy Jane Dickson, aged 27 years. During a protracted illness and at times intense suffering, she manifested the Christian graces in a very marked degree. Her end was peace.

At the family residence, in Murray Harbor North, on March 17th, 1889, of consumption, Mrs. Christie McKerron, in the 45th year of her age. Deceased was naturally amiable, and bore her affliction with fortitude and patience. Her husband, one son and two daughters remain to mourn the loss of a devoted wife and affectionate mother.

At his late residence in Gaspareaux, on April 6th, 1889, Mr. William Hudson Llewellyn, aged 84 years. Deceased was born in England, came to this country many years ago, settled in Gaspareaux where he raised a large family, and lived respected in the neighborhood. For some years past he had been subject to a spasmodic affection of the heart, resulting in mental imbecility, and death eventually. The devoted father and Christian is gone.

At St. Peter's Bay, on the 25th ult., after a lingering illness, borne with Christian resignation, Eunice, beloved wife of James McKay and youngest daughter of the late James Baker, of North Lake, in the 55th year of her age.

At Nine Mile Creek, April 24, John James, only son of Ewen and Sarah Livingstone, aged one year and five months.

The great Jehovah full of love
An angel bright did send,
And took our little harmless dove
To joys that never end.

WANTED.—At this office, copies of the DAILY EXAMINER of February 4th and April 4th and 5th; also, copies of WEEKLY EXAMINER of April 5th, 1889.

A dry, hacking cough keeps the bronchial tubes in a state of constant irritation, which, if not speedily removed, may lead to bronchitis. No prompt remedy can be had than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which is both an anodyne and expectorant.

METEORIC SHOWER.—A very brilliant meteor is said to have been seen near Westfield, King's Co., Thursday evening. It burst into about a dozen pieces, which, in falling, showed very beautiful tints of green and gold.

The value of a remedy should be estimated by its curative properties. According to this standard, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best and most economical blood medicine in the market, because the most pure and concentrated. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

THE NEWSPAPER WINS.—Some time ago the Toronto Telegram made war upon the ring of bootleggers, which controlled the corporation of that city. The Telegram was sued for libel by one of the parties whose reputation was very roughly handled. The Telegram won the case, and the party suing the paper was mulcted in all the costs—$15,000.

A GOOD-SIZED PENSION.—A man named John Mahony, of Debec, Carleton Co., N. B., one of the Northern veterans in the great American war, has just received a tangible recognition of his services, and in return relieved the groaning vaults of the Treasury. The lump sum he has and is to receive amounts to $4,250, and also $20 per month as long as he lives.

VALUABLE STOCK.—The Moncton Times says:—Mr. A. E. Alexander, of Campbellton, bought a fine Haubletonian mare on P. E. Island last week. The mare had a colt just four days old, which Mr. Alexander also purchased. This is the youngest horse flesh that has crossed from the Island for some time. Mr. A. brought it in a cart nineteen miles before shipping it in the boat.

BURNED TO DEATH.—A woman named Bouchard died in the hospital at Montreal on Saturday from burns received at her home the previous evening. It appears that she was placing a lighted lamp on the bureau when a small bottle of olive oil fell upon the chimney, causing an explosion and setting fire to the poor lady's clothes. Her sufferings were very great until relieved by death.

AUCTION.—The auction sale of the McKenna property on Wednesday next, May 8th, at noon, on the premises, offers an excellent chance to secure conveniently situated premises within five minutes' walk of Queen Square, fronting on Malpeque Road near Spring Park, outside but close to city limits, and clear of city taxes. It consists of two acres of land in good condition, a dwelling house, well, barn, etc. A new and substantial sidewalk from Upper Great George Street to this property adds very much to its convenience. See plan on large posters. Sale positive. Terms easy.—A. McNEILL, Auctioneer.

RECORD OF THE SESSION.—Ottawa advises that the record of parliamentary work during the session just closed is as follows: 110 bills have passed. Of these 45 were Government measures, 2 public bills (combines and extradition), 4 affected loan companies, 5 insurance companies, 2 dealt with churches, 1 affected a college, 2 dealt with bridges, 4 with divorce bills and 7 were general bills. The number of addresses and orders issued was 96. The number of returns brought down in response to said addresses and orders was 67, and fourteen returns were presented to Parliament in response to addresses and orders of 1888.

JOURNALISTIC.—The new tri-weekly to be published at Amherst will be called the Record. The first issue will appear on Saturday next. Mr. J. A. Black, of the Gazette, will be the publisher.

Moncton is to have a semi-weekly agricultural journal. Mr. Robert Gilbert, of Shediac, will be the publisher, and he will be assisted by Mr. Patterson, of St. John. Mr. Gilbert was on the staff of the New York Herald last summer.

A new paper, to be called the Owl, and which will be devoted largely to sporting and society news, will make its debut in Moncton on Saturday.

ACCIDENTS AT SOURIS.—On Thursday last, while Miss Coffin, daughter of Wm. Coffin, of Bay Fortune, was running between the barn and the house, she accidentally fell and dislocated her shoulder. She was immediately placed under the care of Dr. Muttart.

Simon Perry was hired by the citizens of Souris to watch all night at the scene of the recent fire. During his watch, a large piece of the bottom of a black bottle came whizzing through the air, and struck him, inflicting a compound fracture of the collar bone, which will lay him up for weeks. He is attended by Dr. Muttart.

A seaman named Mosher, of the schooner Eldaro, of Lunenburg, met with an accident on Saturday last, while making a bait-bunk. His axe struck him on the left shin, below the knee, cutting it the full length of the blade. He was taken back to Souris, and is now doing well under Dr. Muttart's care.

Although scarcely able to see, Joseph Pulitzer has again assumed general direction of affairs at the New York World office.
